Hoffman."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Hoffman.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, a sum not exceeding $250 for the services of an additional stenographer to said committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if that is the usual resolution?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I think so; yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not like to let such a resolution pass without being referred to the Committee on Accounts. I think perhaps I will not object to this one.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from New Hampshire if this resolution has been referred to the Committee on Accounts and reported by that committee?

Mr. SULLOWAY. It has not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Permit me to say that I do not want to be ungracious about it, nor do I want to object; but the gentleman knows that when the gentleman from New Hampshire has appeared before the Committee on Accounts and has undertaken to say that he needed additional help, we have promptly complied with his request. Now, if there is any reason why this resolution should not go to the committee I have no doubt the gentleman can state it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I certainly have no complaints to make against the committee to which the gentleman belongs; they have always treated us very kindly, but the purpose of this resolution is to get this matter through and have this stenographer at work during the recess which is about to come.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object, but I do not want this to be accepted as a precedent. I simply make an exception in this case, at the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire, because he asks it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I thank the gentleman very kindly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 19523) to authorize Thomas J. Ewing and George B. Patton, of Catlettsburg, Ky.; Otto Burger, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Herbert Haynard, of Kenova, W. Va., and Charles Miller, of Huntington, W. Va., to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Thomas J. Ewing, George B. Patton, Otto Bu er, Herbert Haynard, and Charles Miller be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon, foot, and railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or on the property of The Warfield Coal and Salt Company, at Warfield, Ky., where the said Tug River forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 3 strike out "Bu er" and insert "Burger."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE RESIGNATION AND APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 14, 1906.

To the Speaker:

I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House, to take effect at once.

I have the honor to be, respectfully,

M. R. PATTERSON,
Member of Congress, Tenth District, Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this request will be granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. GARRETT as a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, indefinitely, on account of important business.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR BATE.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, January 20, 1907, at 1 o'clock, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public service of Hon. William B. Bate, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE STOCK BY RAILROAD.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas and the live stock producers throughout Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and the western part of the United States generally state in a memorial which I hold in my hand that they are at this time suffering more extensive damage from shortage of cars and other equipment and from bad service in the transportation of live stock by railroad than from disease, limited markets, and all other evils combined.

I ask that this memorial, which I present, may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It is not too much, I trust, Mr. President, to express the hope that the committee may speedily find some remedy for the condition alluded to in the memorial.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the members of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas and live stock producers throughout Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and the entire western part of the United States are at this time suffering more extensive damage from shortage of cars and other equipment and from bad service in the transportation of live stock by railroads than from disease, limited markets, and all other evils combined; and

Whereas the laws of the land require a common carrier when it attempts to operate a railway to furnish equipment, in the way of a good roadbed, ample cars, engines, etc., so as to be able to promptly handle and transport all freight tendered on its line; and

Whereas the owners of railways as an initial investment should furnish the funds to so equip any such railways without depending on donations and income to provide such equipment; and

Whereas the railways, or a large number of them, throughout the territory named above have for many years failed to meet these substantial legal obligations and duties to the public resting upon them, for which failures especially in interstate transportation the law does not provide sufficient remedies and penalties; and

Whereas this evil has, during the last few months, assumed more destructive proportions than ever before to the extent that the injury and damage to the cattle business on account of the railways failing to furnish cars and engines and on account of the imperfect service they have given throughout the West have been enormous; and in this connection it is true that this question of failure to furnish cars and motive power to transport the cattle has been growing worse every year, especially in the matter of furnishing cars on most of the lines, and it has gotten to the point where no cattle raiser can sell his cattle to be delivered on the cars with any expectation of being able to carry out his contract if he has previously contracted a sale of them; neither can he expect to ship his cattle when they are ready for the market, and hundreds of herds have been turned loose on the range after being held for weeks waiting for cars, which had been ordered months before (this is particularly true throughout Texas and New Mexico and doubtless it is equally true throughout the Northwest); and

Whereas this failure on the part of the common carriers to meet the obligations resting upon them has caused paralysis in the cattle industry throughout a large part of the United States; and

Whereas we believe that this failure is not caused alone by the insufficiency of cattle cars, but also on account of insufficient motor power and other defective and insufficient equipment and by reason of the appropriation of cattle cars to the hauling of coal and other commodities; and

Whereas the remedy against these common carriers for the failure to perform their duty in these respects by suing for damages is wholly insufficient and inadequate; and

Whereas it is competent for the Congress of the United States, as applicable to interstate shipments, to enact laws similar to those in Texas covering local shipments in regard to furnishing cars, etc., and to provide either by direct legislation or by conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to control this matter and furnish the live-stock producing interest of the country relief from this terrible calamity and to compel the railways of the country to comply with their fundamental duties to the public in this particular;

Now, therefore, the executive committee of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, in regular session at Fort Worth, Tex., on this December 10, 1906, without reciting special instances of large herds of cattle being held for weeks at shipping points and being turned loose in midwinter because the railways could not ship them out; and without referring to the many cases where cattle have been transported long distances at an unreasonably slow rate of speed of only about 10 miles per hour, which treatment, it is unnecessary to say, is practically destructive to perishable freight like live stock, petition and implore the Congress of the United States to take immediate action for the remedying of this great and growing evil; be it Further resolved, That we recommend that our attorney proceed at once to bring this matter to the attention of the President and of Congress, and that the members of this committee immediately communicate with the Congressmen from their different districts, urging upon them the vital importance of securing at as early a date as possible legislation upon this subject.

IKE T. PRYOR, President.
JNO. T. LYTLE, Secretary.

NAVY YEARBOOK.

Mr. HALE. I present for reprinting, with additions to date, a compilation of the annual naval appropriation laws and tables, and I ask that it be printed as a document. I also ask that 1,600 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, 800 copies for the use of the Senate and 800 copies for the use of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate. This is the fourth edition of the compilation, and it will hereafter be known as the "Navy Yearbook."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks for a reprint of the Navy Yearbook, and that 1,600 additional copies be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. HALE. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations, without amendment, the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, providing for adjournment for the holidays, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 20, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, January 3, 1907.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUILDING AT JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 7040) to provide for the erection of a District of Columbia building and an appropriate exhibit therein at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, and for other purposes, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia were, in section 3, page 2, line 14, after the word "Jamestown," to strike out "Tercentennial Commission" and insert "Exposition Company;" and in the same section, on page 3, line 18, to strike out "Commission" and insert "Company;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be prepared and exhibited at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition by the District of Columbia, and transported from and to said District and elsewhere, such models and photographs of public and private buildings and parks, and such articles, objects, and things as will illustrate the progress and condition of the District of Columbia and of the city of Washington as the nation's capital, under the control, designation, and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the Jamestown Tercentennial Commission are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to enable them to carry out the intent and purpose of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they hereby are, authorized to detail officers and employees of the District of Columbia to aid them to carry out the provisions of this act, who shall receive no compensation other than their regular salaries or pay, but who shall be allowed their actual traveling expenses, and expenses of maintenance, while absent from the District of Columbia under said detail; and the said Commissioners are hereby further authorized to appoint such persons as they may deem necessary to aid them in said exhibit of said District of Columbia, who shall serve without any compensation or allowance whatever.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall obtain the necessary site under the same terms as are offered by the Jamestown Exposition Company to States and other exhibitors and shall cause a suitable building to be erected thereon for the said District of Columbia exhibit, and the other exhibits aforesaid, and shall make all contracts therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations by which they now make contracts for public works and buildings in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in case they shall consider bids received for the construction of said building to be excessive, or if for any other reason they deem that it would be more advantageous to construct the building by day labor rather than by contract, they are hereby authorized to construct such building by day labor and purchase the material for same in open market, if the same can be done within the amount herein appropriated for said site, building, and exhibits. The Commissioners shall further prepare the site and approaches, including preparations for lighting same, and they shall, during the erection and use of said building and grounds, approaches, and appurtenances, and until the close of said exposition, maintain, keep, and care for the same. For the above purposes the said Commissioners are authorized to employ such agents, officers, and employees, in addition to those in this act before mentioned, to be by them appointed and dismissed, at and for such compensation and for such time as they may determine. At the close of said exposition the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall dispose of the said site and building and the materials composing the said building at public or private sale on such terms and conditions as they may deem proper, giving preference to the Jamestown Exposition Company to purchase the same at an appraised value to be ascertained in such manner as the said Commissioners may determine; and the proceeds of said sale shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to reimburse the appropriation in this act contained, one half thereof to the credit of the District of Columbia and the other half to the credit of the United States.

SEC. 4. That to carry out in full all of the provisions of this act the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, one half to be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and as they may direct, and they shall make a complete statement of all expenditures under this act to Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN TO JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION COMPANY.

Mr. WARNER. I am directed by the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions to report back, with a favorable recommendation and with amendments, the bill (S. 6896) appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 as a loan to the Jamestown Exposition Company for the purpose of aiding in the payment of the cost of construction, completion, and opening of the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition on Hampton Roads, Virginia, on April 26, 1907, and to provide for the protection of the Government and insuring the repayment of the sum of $1,000,000 by a first lien upon the gross receipts of the said exposition company from all paid admissions to the grounds of said exposition and from all moneys received from concessions after the opening of said exposition, and I submit a report thereon. I desire to call the attention of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. If in order to do so, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take present consideration of the bill reported by the junior Senator from Missouri. I do not know that I am in order to say anything in support of this request, but I can state the considerations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is a very important bill, and there are provisions in it which I do not understand from the reading. I think it is proper that it should go over in order that Senators may have an opportunity to examine it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar.

POTOMAC RIVER HIGHWAY BRIDGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I report back from the Committee on the District of Columbia, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. 76) providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C. The War Department is extremely anxious that this measure should be immediately acted on, and I venture to ask for present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River, authorized by section 12 of the act of Congress approved February 12, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," as amended by the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved July 1, 1902, and as amended by joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C., approved February 18, 1905, and as amended by joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C., approved February 19, 1906, be, and is hereby, extended to June 30, 1907.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the joint resolution is just as it was printed and laid on our desks? It is from the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURKETT. And just the same as it was printed?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is exactly the same.

Mr. BURKETT. I happened to be absent when it was considered by the committee. I should like to ask the Senator what is the cause of this delay. I think we extended the time a year ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; we have extended the time, I think, twice before. The work is practically completed. The time has expired, however, and there are a few items of expenditure yet to be made. The War Department has made the request that this extension should be granted. I think it is important that it should be done.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any estimate for increased expense that comes with it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution just read?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

VOLUNTEER RETIRED LIST.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2162) to create in the War Department a special roll, to be known as the "Volunteer retired list;" to authorize placing thereon with pay certain surviving officers of the United States Volunteer Army of the civil war, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following amendments intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

An amendment providing for the payment of mileage to clerks of committees and clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, etc.; and

An amendment proposing to increase the compensation paid to clerks to committees and clerks to Senators.

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted an amendment providing for one clerk (in lieu of a private now detailed as clerk) of the Capitol police at $1,200 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LOSS OF LIGHTER MARIA.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what allowance, if any, has been made by the Quartermaster-General's Department on the claim of Brooks & Co., of Santiago, for the loss of the lighter Maria while in the service of the Government of the United States during its military occupation of Cuba.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask that that resolution may be again read.

Mr. LODGE. It is a resolution asking for certain papers in a claim for damage to a vessel caused by a Government transport.

Mr. BACON. That is sufficient, Mr. President.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

D. M. CARMAN, MANILA, P. I.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what allowances, if any, have been made by the Quartermaster-General's Department and remain unpaid upon claims of D. M. Carman, of Manila, P. I., arising out of his contracts with the said department for lighters, cascos, or other means of transportation in the Philippines.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL POWERS.

Mr. WHYTE. I offer resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask that they may be read and lie upon the table.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

1. Resolved, That the people of the several States, acting in their highest sovereign capacity as free and independent States, adopted the Federal Constitution and established a form of government in the nature of a confederated republic, and for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects for which it was formed delegated to that Government certain rights enumerated in said Constitution; but reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people thereof, all the residuary powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States.

2. Resolved further, That the extension of the Federal powers beyond those enumerated in the Constitution can only be rightfully accomplished in the manner provided by that instrument, and not by a strained construction of the Constitution, which shall obliterate all State rights and vest the coveted, but not granted, power where it will be exercised by the General Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will lie on the table, at the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE].

POWER TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to consider and report to the Senate at the earliest convenient date whether the Congress in the exercise of the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes, can, in its opinion, constitutionally prohibit the transportation of commodities from the State in which they were produced to other States, or to other countries, because the same were produced in whole or in part by child labor.

EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS AND RESERVED STATE RIGHTS.

Mr. RAYNER. I offer resolutions, which I ask may be read and lie upon the table.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the functions of the Executive should be limited to the performance of the duties assigned to him by the Constitution and by the laws passed in pursuance thereof; and there should be no interference by the Executive with the legislative or judicial departments of the Government or with the reserved rights of the States; and the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of the Government should be forever kept separate and distinct; and

Resolved further, That the States have no authority to surrender any of their reserved rights under the Constitution to the Federal Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will lie on the table, at the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to make an early investigation into the character and operation and the effect upon interstate commerce of the combination or trust organization known as the "International Harvester Company" and allied concerns engaged in the production, handling, and sale of farm machinery; the investigation to include an inquiry as to whether the prices and output of such machinery appear to be or to have been controlled and regulated by direction of any particular individual or combination of individuals, by a corporation, or otherwise; whether there exists at present a healthy competition between local dealers in farm machinery, and whether the quality of the same is on the average as good as in former years.

REPORT ON REVISION OF THE LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the final report of the Commission to Revise the Laws of the United States, to which he invites the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. I assume that ordinarily such a report would go to the standing Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, but at the last session of Congress a special joint committee was created to report upon the revision of the laws as made by the Commission. I suggest that this report had probably better be referred to that committee, and, if in order, I ask that it may be so referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the report will be referred to the special committee indicated by him. Does the Senator desire the report printed? The Chair will state that it is submitted in printed form.

Mr. FULTON. No, Mr. President, in view of that fact, I think it will not be necessary to order a reprint.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the report will be referred, as indicated, without printing.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

The developments of the past year emphasize with increasing force the need of vigorous and immediate action to recast the public land laws and adapt them to the actual situation. The Timber and Stone Act has demonstrated conclusively that its effect is to turn over the public timber lands to great corporations. It has done enormous harm, it is no longer needed, and it should be repealed.

The Desert Land Act results so frequently in fraud and so comparatively seldom in making homes on the land that it demands radical amendment. That provision which permits assignment before patent should be repealed, and the entryman should be required to live for not less than two years at home on the land before patent issues. Otherwise the Desert Land law will continue to assist speculators and other large holders to get control of land and water on the public domain by indefensible means.

The commutation clause of the Homestead Act serves, in a majority of cases, to defeat the purpose of the Homestead Act itself, which is to facilitate settlement and create homes. In theory the commutation clause should assist the honest settler, and doubtless in some cases it does so. Far more often, it supplies the means by which speculators and loan and mortgage companies secure possession of the land. Actual—not constructive—living at home on the land for three years should be required before commutation, unless it should appear wiser to repeal the commutation clause altogether.

These matters are more fully discussed in the Report of the Public Lands Commission, to which I again call your attention.

I am gravely concerned at the extremely unsatisfactory condition of the public land laws and at the prevalence of fraud under their present provisions. For much of this fraud the present laws are chiefly responsible. There is but one way by which the fraudulent acquisition of these lands can be definitely stopped; and therefore I have directed the Secretary of the Interior to allow no patent to be issued to public land under any law until by an examination on the ground actual compliance with that law has been found to exist. For this purpose an increase of special agents in the General Land Office is urgently required; unless it is given, bona fide would-be settlers will be put to grave inconvenience, or else the fraud will in large part go on. Further, the Secretary of the Interior should be enabled to employ enough mining experts to examine the validity of all mineral land claims, and to undertake the supervision and control of the use of the mineral fuels still belonging to the United States. The present coal law limiting the individual entry to 160 acres puts a premium on fraud by making it impossible to develop certain types of coal fields and yet comply with the law. It is a scandal to maintain laws which sound well, but which make fraud the key without which great natural resources must remain closed. The law should give individuals and corporations, under proper government regulation and control, (the details of which I shall not at present discuss) the right to work bodies of coal land large enough for profitable development. My own belief is that there should be provision for leasing coal, oil and gas rights under proper restrictions. If the additional force of special agents and mining experts I recommend is provided and well used, the result will be not only to stop the land frauds, but to prevent delays in patenting valid land claims, and to conserve the indispensable fuel resources of the Nation.

RIGHTS OF WAY AND PRIVILEGES.

Many of the existing laws affecting rights of way and privileges on public lands and reservations are illogical and unfair. Some work injustice by granting valuable rights in perpetuity without return. Others fail to protect the grantee in his possession of permanent improvements made at large expense. In fairness to the Government, to the holders of rights and privileges on the public lands, and to the people whom the latter serve, I urge the revision and reenactment of these laws in one comprehensive act, providing that the regulations and the charge now in force in many cases may be extended to all, to the end that unregulated or monopolistic control of great natural resources may not be acquired or misused for private ends.

PRIVATE HOLDINGS WITHIN NATIONAL FORESTS.

The boundaries of the national forest reserves unavoidably include certain valuable timber lands not owned by the Government. Important among them are the land grants of various railroads. For more than two years negotiations with the land grant railroads have been in progress, looking toward an arrangement by which the forest on railroad lands within national forest reserves may be preserved by the removal of the present crop of timber under rules prescribed by the Forest Service, and its perpetuation may be assured by the transfer of the land to the Government without cost. The advantage of such an arrangement to the Government lies in the acquisition of lands whose protection is necessary to the general welfare. The advantage to the railroads is found in the proposal to allow them to consolidate their holdings of timber within forest reserves by exchange after deeding their lands to the Government, and thus to cut within a limited time solid bodies of timber instead of alternate sections, although the amount of timber in each case would be the same. It is possible that legislation will be required to authorize this or a similar arrangement with the railroads and other owners. If so I recommend that it be enacted.

WORKING CAPITAL FOR THE NATIONAL FORESTS.

The money value of the national forests now reserved for the use and benefit of the people exceeds considerably the sum of one thousand millions of dollars. The stumpage value of the standing timber approaches seven hundred million dollars, and together with the range and timber lands, the water for irrigation and power, and the subsidiary values, reaches an amount equal to that of the national property now under the immediate control of the army and navy together. But this vast domain is withheld from serving the nation as freely and fully as it might by the lack of capital to develop it. The yearly running expenses are sufficiently met by the annual appropriation and the proceeds of the forests. Under the care of the Forest Service the latter are increasing at the rate of more than half a million dollars a year; the estimate of appropriation for the present year is less than for last year; and it is confidently expected that by 1910 the Forest Service will be entirely self-supporting. In the meantime there is the most urgent need for trails, fences, cabins for the rangers, bridges, telephone lines, and the other items of equipment without which the reserves can not be handled to advantage, can not be protected properly, and can not contribute as they should to the general welfare. Expenditures for such permanent improvements are properly chargeable to capital account. The lack of reasonable working equipment weakens the protection of the national forests and greatly limits their production. This want can not be supplied from the appropriation for running expenses. The need is urgent. Accordingly I recommend that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to advance to the Forest Service, upon the security of the standing timber, an amount say $5,000,000, sufficient to provide a reasonable working capital for the national forests, to bear interest and to be repaid in annual installments beginning in ten years.

TRANSFER OF THE NATIONAL PARKS.

The national parks of the West are forested and they lie without exception within or adjacent to national forest reserves. Two years ago the latter were transferred to the care of the Secretary of Agriculture, with the most satisfactory results. The same reasons which led to this transfer make advisable a similar transfer of the national parks, now in charge of the Secretary of the Interior, and I recommend legislation to that end.

INDIAN LANDS.

Within or adjoining national forests are considerable areas of Indian lands of more value under forest than for any other purpose. It would aid greatly in putting these lands to their best use if the power to create national forests by proclamation were extended to cover them. The Indians should be paid the full value of any land thus taken for public purposes, from the proceeds of the lands themselves, but such land should revert to the Indians if it is excluded from national forest use before full payment has been made.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF GRAZING.

The control of grazing in the national forests is an assured success. The condition of the range is improving rapidly, water is being developed, much feed formerly wasted is now saved and used, range controversies are settled, opposition to the grazing fee is practically at an end, and the stockmen are earnestly supporting the Forest Service and cooperating with it effectively for the improvement of the range.

The situation on the open Government range is strikingly different. Its carrying capacity has probably been reduced one-half by overgrazing, and is still falling. Range controversies in many places are active and bitter, and life and property are often in danger. The interests both of the live-stock industry and of the Government are needlessly impaired. The present situation is indefensible from any point of view, and it should be ended.

I recommend that a bill be enacted which will provide for Government control of the public range through the Department of Agriculture, which alone is equipped for that work. Such a bill should insure to each locality rules for grazing specially adapted to its needs and should authorize the collection of a reasonable grazing fee. Above all the rights of the settler and homemaker should be absolutely guaranteed.

Much of the public land can only be used to advantage for grazing when fenced. Much fencing has been done for that reason, and also to prevent other stock owners from using land to which they have an equal right under the law. Reasonable fencing which promotes the use of the range and yet interferes neither with settlement nor with other range rights, would be thoroughly desirable if it were legal. Yet the law forbids it, and the law must and will be enforced; I will see to it that the illegal fences are removed unless Congress, at the present session, takes steps to legalize proper fencing by government control of the range.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 17, 1906.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask, if it be proper to do so, that that message be printed and lie upon the table, subject to be called up for consideration. I desire at a proper time to submit some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers and illustrations, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my last three annual messages I have invited the attention of the Congress to the urgent necessity of such legislation as will cause officers of the line of the Navy to reach the grades of captain and rear-admiral at less advanced ages and will give them more experience and training in the important duties of those grades. Under the present archaic system of promotion, without parallel in the navy of any other first-class power, captains are commissioned at the average age of fifty-six and rear-admirals at the average age of sixty. This system is the result of a long-continued prejudice in favor of a method of promotion by which all lieutenants in order of seniority pass through the several grades until they eventually become rear-admirals; a method which sacrifices the good of the service to the interest of individual mediocrity. As a direct consequence of the existing method naval officers obtain more than ample service in subordinate positions, but have a limited and inadequate experience as captains in command of battle ships and as flag officers in charge of fleets and squardrons; that is, in the very positions of greatest responsibility, where experience, skill, and initiative are essential to efficiency. Moreover, they attain the position of a flag officer but a few months before they reach the retiring age and have no opportunity to perfect themselves in the important duties of the high commands pertaining to such rank.

History, modern and ancient, has invariably shown that an efficient personnel is the greatest factor toward an effective navy. No matter how well equipped in other respects a navy may be, though its fleet may be composed of powerful high-speed battle ships, maneuvered by complicated tactics based upon the latest development of naval science, yet it is grievously handicapped if directed by admirals and captains who lack experience in their duties and who are hampered by long deprivation of independent action and responsibility. To oppose such a fleet to one equally good, led by officers more active and more experienced in their duties, is to invite disaster.

The following table gives the ages of the youngest captains and flag officers, with the average years in grade, in the navies of Great Britain, France, Germany, Japan, and the United States:

	Captains.		Seagoing flag officers.
	Age.	Average years in grade.	Age.	Average years in grade.
Great Britain	35	11.2	45	8.0
France	47	9.5	53	14.2
Germany	42	6.2	51	6.0
Japan	38	8.0	44	11.0
United States	55	4.5	59	1.5

The facts shown in this table are startling, and earnest attention is invited to them.

The Secretary of the Navy several months ago convened a board of six representative line officers with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy as President, to consider and recommend such changes in existing law relative to the commissioned personnel of the line of the navy as would tend to promote efficiency and economy. The essential recommendations of the board have been cordially approved by the Secretary. The bill, herewith transmitted to the Congress, has been formulated by the Secretary and is based, except in a few details, upon the recommendations of the board. I earnestly recommend its early consideration. Should it be enacted into law it will cause officers on the seagoing list to reach the grade of captain at forty-eight and rear-admiral at fifty-five, and will assure their serving seven years in the grade of captain and seven years in the grade of rear-admiral, thus enabling them to become thoroughly skillful and efficient in these grades.

The accompanying bill also establishes the grade of vice-admiral. This grade has long existed in all other principal navies of the world in order to obtain a selected grade of skilled commanders-in-chief. The commander-in-chief of a fleet, with one or more rear-admirals serving under him, is logically entitled to a higher rank than his subordinates, because of his greater authority and responsibility. On occasions of official importance, of international council, or of combined naval action (as for instance the Boxer troubles in China), the interests of this great nation demand that our naval representative shall rank as the equal of the naval representatives of other powers.

Moreover, under the accompanying bill, which is the result of recommendations made by a board principally composed of naval officers, a large percentage of the officers are eliminated from the seagoing list and never reach the grade of rear-admiral. When it is considered that the naval officers themselves recommended, in order to increase the efficiency of their service, that many be denied their existing privilege of reaching flag rank, it is only just to them that we should place their highest officers on a plane of equal rank with their colleagues of other nations, with whom they are so frequently brought in official contact.

If the proposed plan of promotion is carried out, it will, as compared with existing law, make a saving of more than $5,000,000 during the next seven years. The principal part of this saving is made by stopping the voluntary retirement of young lieutenant-commanders with the rank and pay of commanders upon the retired list.

I am firmly of the opinion that unless the present condition of the higher commissioned personnel is rectified by judicious legislation, the future of our navy will be gravely compromised.

I forward herewith a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, inclosing duplicate drafts of the proposed bill. I also forward a copy of the report of the Personnel Board of the Navy.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 17, 1906.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In the month of November I visited the Isthmus of Panama, going over the Canal Zone with considerable care; and also visited the cities of Panama and Colon, which are not in the Zone or under the United States flag, but as to which the United States Government, through its agents, exercises control for certain sanitary purposes.

The U. S. S. Louisiana, on which I was, anchored off Colon about half past 2 on Wednesday afternoon, November 14. I came aboard her, after my stay on shore, at about half past 9 on Saturday evening, November 17. On Wednesday afternoon and evening I received the President of Panama and his suite, and saw members of the Canal Commission, and various other gentlemen, perfecting the arrangement for my visit, so that every hour that I was ashore could be employed to advantage. I was three days ashore—not a sufficient length of time to allow of an exhaustive investigation of the minutiæ of the work of any single department, still less to pass judgment on the engineering problems, but enough to enable me to get a clear idea of the salient features of the great work and of the progress that has been made as regards the sanitation of the Zone, Colon, and Panama, the caring for and housing of the employees, and the actual digging of the canal. The Zone is a narrow strip of land, and it can be inspected much as one can inspect 50 or 60 miles of a great railroad at the point where it runs through mountains or overcomes other natural obstacles.

I chose the month of November for my visit partly because it is the rainiest month of the year, the month in which the work goes forward at the greatest disadvantage, and one of the two months which the medical department of the French Canal Company found most unhealthy.

Immediately after anchoring on the afternoon of Wednesday there was a violent storm of wind and rain. From that time we did not again see the sun until Saturday morning, the rain continuing almost steadily, but varying from a fine drizzle to a torrential downpour. During that time in fifteen minutes at Cristobal 1.05 inches of rain fell; from 1 to 3 a. m., November 16, 3.2 inches fell; for the twenty-four hours ending noon, November 16, 4.68 inches fell, and for the six days ending noon, November 16, 10.24 inches fell. The Chagres rose in flood to a greater height than it had attained during the last fifteen years, tearing out the track in one place. It would have been impossible to see the work going on under more unfavorable weather conditions. On Saturday, November 17, the sun shone now and then for a few minutes, although the day was generally overcast and there were heavy showers at intervals.

FIRST DAY ASHORE.

On Thursday morning we landed at about half past seven and went slowly over the line of the Panama Railway, ending with an expedition in a tug at the Pacific entrance of the canal out to the islands where the dredging for the canal will cease. We took our dinner at one of the eating houses furnished by the Commission for the use of the Government employees—no warning of our coming being given. I inspected the Ancon Hospital, going through various wards both for white patients and for colored patients. I inspected portions of the constabulary (Zone police), examining the men individually. I also examined certain of the schools and saw the school children, both white and colored, speaking with certain of the teachers. In the afternoon of this day I was formally received in Panama by President Amador, who, together with the Government and all the people of Panama, treated me with the most considerate courtesy, for which I hereby extend my most earnest thanks. I was driven through Panama and in a public square was formally received and welcomed by the President and other members of the Government; and in the evening I attended a dinner given by the President, and a reception, which was also a Government function. I also drove through the streets of Panama for the purpose of observing what had been done. We slept at the Hotel Tivoli, at Ancon, which is on a hill directly outside of the city of Panama, but in the Zone.

SECOND DAY.

On Friday morning we left the hotel at 7 o'clock and spent the entire day going through the Culebra cut—the spot in which most work will have to be done in any event. We watched the different steam shovels working; we saw the drilling and blasting; we saw many of the dirt trains (of the two different types used), both carrying the earth away from the steam shovels and depositing it on the dumps—some of the dumps being run out in the jungle merely to get rid of the earth, while in other cases they are being used for double tracking the railway, and in preparing to build the great dams. I visited many of the different villages, inspecting thoroughly many different buildings—the local receiving hospitals, the houses in which the unmarried white workmen live, those in which the unmarried colored workmen live; also the quarters of the white married employees and of the married colored employees; as well as the commissary stores, the bath houses, the water-closets, the cook sheds for the colored laborers, and the Government canteens, or hotels, at which most of the white employees take their meals. I went through the machine shops. During the day I talked with scores of different men—superintendents and heads of departments, divisions, and bureaus; steam-shovel men, machinists, conductors, engineers, clerks, wives of the American employees, health officers, colored laborers, colored attendants, and managers of the commissary stores where food is sold to the colored laborers; wives of the colored employees who are married. In the evening I had an interview with the British consul, Mr. Mallet, a gentleman who for many years has well and honorably represented the British Government on the Isthmus of Panama and who has a peculiar relation to our work because the bulk of the colored laborers come from the British West Indies. I also saw the French consul, Mr. Gey, a gentleman of equally long service and honorable record. I saw the lieutenants, the chief executive and administrative officers, under the engineering and sanitary departments. I also saw and had long talks with two deputations—one of machinists and one representing the railway men of the dirt trains—listening to what they had to say as to the rate of pay and various other matters and going over, as much in detail as possible, all the different questions they brought up. As to some matters I was able to meet their wishes, as to others I felt that what they requested could not be done consistently with my duty to the United States Government as a whole; as to yet others I reserved judgment.

THIRD DAY.

On Saturday morning we started at 8 o'clock from the hotel. We went through the Culebra cut, stopping off to see the marines, and also to investigate certain towns; one, of white employees, as to which in certain respects complaint had been made to me; and another town where I wanted to see certain houses of the colored employees. We went over the site of the proposed Gatun dam, having on the first day inspected the sites of the proposed La Boca and Sosa dams. We went out on a little toy railway to the reservoir, which had been built to supply the people of Colon with water for their houses. There we took lunch at the engineers' mess. We then went through the stores and shops of Cristobal, inspecting carefully the houses of both the white and colored employees, married and unmarried, together with the other buildings. We then went to Colon and saw the fire department at work; in four minutes from the signal the engines had come down to Front street, and twenty-one 2½-inch hose pipes were raising streams of water about 75 feet high. We rode about Colon, through the various streets, paved, unpaved, and in process of paving, looking at the ditches, sewers, curbing, and the lights. I then went over the Colon hospital in order to compare it with the temporary town or field receiving hospitals which I had already seen and inspected. I also inspected some of the dwellings of the employees. In the evening I attended a reception given by the American employees on the Isthmus, which took place on one of the docks in Colon, and from there went aboard the Louisiana.

Each day from twelve to eighteen hours were spent in going over and inspecting all there was to be seen and in examining various employees. Throughout my trip I was accompanied by the Surgeon-General of the Navy, Doctor Rixey; by the Chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, Mr. Shonts; by Chief Engineer Stevens; by Doctor Gorgas, the chief sanitary officer of the Commission; by Mr. Bishop, the Secretary of the Commission; by Mr. Ripley, the Principal Assistant Engineer; by Mr. Jackson Smith, who has had practical charge of collecting and handling the laboring force; by Mr. Bierd, general manager of the railway, and by Mr. Rogers, the general counsel of the Commission; and many other officials joined us from time to time.

At the outset I wish to pay a tribute to the amount of work done by the French Canal Company under very difficult circumstances. Many of the buildings they put up were excellent and are still in use, though, naturally, the houses are now getting out of repair and are being used as dwellings only until other houses can be built, and much of the work they did in the Culebra cut, and some of the work they did in digging has been of direct and real benefit. This country has never made a better investment than the $40,000,000 which it paid to the French Company for work and betterments, including especially the Panama Railroad.

An inspection on the ground at the height of the rainy season served to convince me of the wisdom of Congress in refusing to adopt either a high-level or a sea-level canal. There seems to be a universal agreement among all people competent to judge that the Panama route, the one actually chosen, is much superior to both the Nicaragua and Darien routes.

PRELIMINARY WORK BEING DONE.

The wisdom of the canal management has been shown in nothing more clearly than in the way in which the foundations of the work have been laid. To have yielded to the natural impatience of ill-informed outsiders and begun all kinds of experiments in work prior to a thorough sanitation of the Isthmus, and to a fairly satisfactory working out of the problem of getting and keeping a sufficient labor supply, would have been disastrous. The various preliminary measures had to be taken first; and these could not be taken so as to allow us to begin the real work of construction prior to January 1 of the present year. It then became necessary to have the type of the canal decided, and the only delay has been the necessary delay until the 29th day of June, the date when the Congress definitely and wisely settled that we should have an 85-foot level canal. Immediately after that the work began in hard earnest and has been continued with increasing vigor ever since; and it will continue so to progress in the future. When the contracts are let the conditions will be such as to insure a constantly increasing amount of performance.

SUCCESSFUL SANITATION.

The first great problem to be solved, upon the solution of which the success of the rest of the work depended, was the problem of sanitation. This was from the outset under the direction of Dr. W. C. Gorgas, who is to be made a full member of the Commission, if the law as to the composition of the Commission remains unchanged. It must be remembered that his work was not mere sanitation as the term is understood in our ordinary municipal work. Throughout the Zone and in the two cities of Panama and Colon, in addition to the sanitation work proper, he has had to do all the work that the Marine-Hospital Service does as regards the Nation, that the health department officers do in the various States and cities, and that Colonel Waring did in New York when he cleaned its streets. The results have been astounding. The Isthmus had been a byword for deadly unhealthfulness. Now, after two years of our occupation the conditions as regards sickness and the death rate compare favorably with reasonably healthy localities in the United States. Especial care has been devoted to minimizing the risk due to the presence of those species of mosquitoes which have been found to propagate malarial and yellow fevers. In all the settlements, the little temporary towns or cities composed of the white and black employees, which grow up here and there in the tropic jungle as the needs of the work dictate, the utmost care is exercised to keep the conditions healthy. Everywhere are to be seen the drainage ditches which in removing the water have removed the breeding places of the mosquitoes, while the whole jungle is cut away for a considerable space around the habitations, thus destroying the places in which the mosquitoes take shelter. These drainage ditches and clearings are in evidence in every settlement, and, together with the invariable presence of mosquito screens around the piazzas, and of mosquito doors to the houses, not to speak of the careful fumigation that has gone on in all infected houses, doubtless explain the extraordinary absence of mosquitoes. As a matter of fact, but a single mosquito, and this not of the dangerous species, was seen by any member of our party during my three days on the Isthmus. Equal care is taken by the inspectors of the health department to secure cleanliness in the houses and proper hygienic conditions of every kind. I inspected between twenty and thirty water-closets, both those used by the white employees and those used by the colored laborers. In almost every case I found the conditions perfect. In but one case did I find them really bad. In this case, affecting a settlement of unmarried white employees, I found them very bad indeed, but the buildings were all inherited from the French Company and were being used temporarily while other buildings were in the course of construction; and right near the defective water-closet a new and excellent closet with a good sewer pipe was in process of construction and nearly finished. Nevertheless this did not excuse the fact that the bad condition had been allowed to prevail. Temporary accommodations, even if only such as soldiers use when camped in the field, should have been provided. Orders to this effect were issued. I append the report of Doctor Gorgas on the incident. I was struck, however, by the fact that in this instance, as in almost every other where a complaint was made which proved to have any justification whatever, it appeared that steps had already been taken to remedy the evil complained of, and that the trouble was mainly due to the extreme difficulty, and often impossibility, of providing in every place for the constant increase in the numbers of employees. Generally the provision is made in advance, but it is not possible that this should always be the case; when it is not there ensues a period of time during which the conditions are unsatisfactory, until a remedy can be provided; but I never found a case where the remedy was not being provided as speedily as possible.

HOSPITALS AND THEIR TREATMENT.

I inspected the large hospitals at Ancon and Colon, which are excellent examples of what tropical hospitals should be. I also inspected the receiving hospitals in various settlements. I went through a number of the wards in which the colored men are treated, a number of those in which the white men are treated—Americans and Spaniards. Both white men and black men are treated exactly alike, and their treatment is as good as that which could be obtained in our first-class hospitals at home. All the patients that I saw, with one or two exceptions, were laborers or other employees on the canal works and railways, most of them being colored men of the ordinary laborer stamp. Not only are the men carefully cared for whenever they apply for care, but so far as practicable a watch is kept to see that if they need it they are sent to the hospitals, whether they desire to go or not. From no responsible source did any complaint come to me as to the management of the hospital service, although occasionally a very ignorant West India negro when he is first brought into the hospital becomes frightened by the ordinary hospital routine.

HEALTH SHOWING REMARKABLY GOOD.

Just at present the health showing on the Isthmus is remarkably good—so much better than in most sections of the United States that I do not believe that it can possibly continue at quite its present average. Thus, early in the present year a band of several hundred Spaniards were brought to the Isthmus as laborers, and additions to their number have been made from time to time; yet since their arrival in February last but one of those Spaniards thus brought over to work on the canal has died of disease, and he of typhoid fever. Two others were killed, one in a railroad accident, and one by a dynamite explosion. There has been for the last six months a well-nigh steady decline in the death rate for the population of the Zone, this being largely due to the decrease in deaths from pneumonia, which has been the most fatal disease on the Isthmus. In October there were ninety-nine deaths of every kind among the employees of the Isthmus. There were then on the rolls 5,500 whites, seven-eighths of them being Americans. Of these whites but two died of disease, and as it happened neither man was an American. Of the 6,000 white Americans, including some 1,200 women and children, not a single death has occurred in the past three months, whereas in an average city in the United States the number of deaths for a similar number of people in that time would have been about thirty from disease. This very remarkable showing can not of course permanently obtain, but it certainly goes to prove that if good care is taken the Isthmus is not a particularly unhealthy place. In October, of the 19,000 negroes on the roll 86 died from disease; pneumonia being the most destructive disease, and malarial fever coming second. The difficulty of exercising a thorough supervision over the colored laborers is of course greater than is the case among the whites, and they are also less competent to take care of themselves, which accounts for the fact that their death rate is so much higher than that of the whites, in spite of the fact that they have been used to similar climatic conditions. Even among the colored employees it will be seen that the death rate is not high.

DIMINUTION OF MOSQUITOES.

In Panama and Colon the death rate has also been greatly reduced, this being directly due to the vigorous work of the special brigade of employees who have been inspecting houses where the stegomyia mosquito is to be found, and destroying its larvæ and breeding places, and doing similar work in exterminating the malarial mosquitoes—in short, in performing all kinds of hygienic labor. A little over a year ago all kinds of mosquitoes, including the two fatal species, were numerous about the Culebra cut. In this cut during last October every room of every house was carefully examined, and only two mosquitoes, neither of them of the two fatal species, were found. Unfaltering energy in inspection and in disinfecting and in the work of draining and of clearing brush are responsible for the change. I append Doctor Gorgas's report on the health conditions; also a letter from Surgeon-General Rixey to Doctor Gorgas. The Surgeon-General reported to me that the hygienic conditions on the Isthmus were about as good as, for instance, those in the Norfolk Navy-Yard.

Corozal, some 4 miles from La Boca, was formerly one of the most unsanitary places on the Isthmus, probably the most unsanitary. There was a marsh with a pond in the middle. Doctor Gorgas had both the marsh and pond drained and the brush cleared off, so that now, when I went over the ground, it appeared like a smooth meadow intersected by drainage ditches. The breeding places and sheltering spots of the dangerous mosquitoes had been completely destroyed. The result is that Corozal for the last six months (like La Boca, which formerly also had a very unsanitary record), shows one of the best sick rates in the Zone, having less than 1 per cent a week admitted to the hospital. At Corozal there is a big hotel filled with employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission, some of them with their wives and families. Yet this healthy and attractive spot was stigmatized as a "hog wallow" by one of the least scrupulous and most foolish of the professional scandal-mongers who from time to time have written about the Commission's work.

IMPROVEMENTS IN PANAMA AND COLON.

The sanitation work in the cities of Panama and Colon has been just as important as in the Zone itself, and in many respects much more difficult; because it was necessary to deal with the already existing population, which naturally had scant sympathy with revolutionary changes, the value of which they were for a long time not able to perceive. In Colon the population consists largely of colored laborers who, having come over from the West Indies to work on the canal, abandon the work and either take to the brush or lie idle in Colon itself; thus peopling Colon with the least desirable among the imported laborers, for the good and steady men of course continue at the work. Yet astonishing progress has been made in both cities. In Panama 90 per cent of the streets that are to be paved at all are already paved with an excellent brick pavement laid in heavy concrete, a few of the streets being still in process of paving. The sewer and water services in the city are of the most modern hygienic type, some of the service having just been completed.

In Colon the conditions are peculiar, and it is as regards Colon that most of the very bitter complaint has been made. Colon is built on a low coral island, covered at more or less shallow depths with vegetable accumulations or mold, which affords sustenance and strength to many varieties of low-lying tropical plants. One-half of the surface of the island is covered with water at high tide, the average height of the land being 1½ feet above low tide. The slight undulations furnish shallow, natural reservoirs or fresh-water breeding places for every variety of mosquito, and the ground tends to be lowest in the middle. When the town was originally built no attempt was made to fill the low ground, either in the streets or on the building sites, so that the entire surface was practically a quagmire; when the quagmire became impassable certain of the streets were crudely improved by filling especially bad mud holes with soft rock or other material. In September, 1905, a systematic effort was begun to formulate a general plan for the proper sanitation of the city; in February last temporary relief measures were taken, while in July the prosecution of the work was begun in good earnest. The results are already visible in the sewering, draining, guttering and paving of the streets. Some four months will be required before the work of sewerage and street improvement will be completed, but the progress already made is very marked. Ditches have been dug through the town, connecting the salt water on both sides, and into these the ponds, which have served as breeding places for the mosquitoes, are drained. These ditches have answered their purpose, for they are probably the chief cause of the astonishing diminution in the number of mosquitoes. More ditches of the kind are being constructed.

COLON WATER SUPPLY.

It was not practicable, with the force at the Commission's disposal, and in view of the need that the force should be used in the larger town of Panama, to begin this work before early last winter. Water mains were then laid in the town and water was furnished to the people early in March from a temporary reservoir. This reservoir proved to be of insufficient capacity before the end of the dry season and the shortage was made up by hauling water over the Panama railroad, so that there was at all times an ample supply of the very best water. Since that time the new reservoir back of Mount Hope has been practically completed. I visited this reservoir. It is a lake over a mile long and half a mile broad. It now carries some 500,000,000 gallons of first-class water. I forward herewith a photograph of this lake, together with certain other photographs of what I saw while I was on the Isthmus. Nothing but a cataclysm will hereafter render it necessary in the dry season to haul water for the use of Colon and Cristobal.

One of the most amusing (as well as dishonest) attacks made upon the Commission was in connection with this reservoir. The writer in question usually confined himself to vague general mendacity; but in this case he specifically stated that there was no water in the vicinity fit for a reservoir (I drank it, and it was excellent), and that this particular reservoir would never hold water anyway. Accompanying this message, as I have said above, is a photograph of the reservoir as I myself saw it, and as it has been in existence ever since the article in question was published. With typical American humor, the engineering corps still at work at the reservoir have christened a large boat which is now used on the reservoir by the name of the individual who thus denied the possibility of the reservoir's existence.

COLON PAVEMENTS.

I rode through the streets of Colon, seeing them at the height of the rainy season, after two days of almost unexampled downpour, when they were at their very worst. Taken as a whole they were undoubtedly very bad; as bad as Pennsylvania avenue in Washington before Grant's Administration. Front street is already in thoroughly satisfactory shape however. Some of the side streets are also in good condition. In others the change in the streets is rapidly going on. Through three-fourths of the town it is now possible to walk, even during the period of tremendous rain, in low shoes without wetting one's feet, owing to the rapidity with which the surface water is carried away in the ditches. In the remaining one-fourth of the streets the mud is very deep—about as deep as in the ordinary street of a low-lying prairie river town of the same size in the United States during early spring. All men to whom I spoke were a unit in saying that the conditions of the Colon streets were 100 per cent better than a year ago. The most superficial examination of the town shows the progress that has been made and is being made in macadamizing the streets. Complaint was made to me by an entirely reputable man as to the character of some of the material used for repairing certain streets. On investigation the complaint proved well founded, but it also appeared that the use of the material in question had been abandoned, the Commission after having tried it in one or two streets finding it not appropriate.

COMPLAINTS NOT WELL FOUNDED.

The result of the investigation of this honest complaint was typical of what occurred when I investigated most of the other honest complaints made to me. That is, where the complaints were not made wantonly or maliciously, they almost always proved due to failure to appreciate the fact that time was necessary in the creation and completion of this Titanic work in a tropic wilderness. It is impossible to avoid some mistakes in building a giant canal through jungle-covered mountains and swamps, while at the same time sanitating tropic cities, and providing for the feeding and general care of from twenty to thirty thousand workers. The complaints brought to me, either of insufficient provision in caring for some of the laborers, or of failure to finish the pavements of Colon, or of failure to supply water, or of failure to build wooden sidewalks for the use of the laborers in the rainy season, on investigation proved, almost without exception, to be due merely to the utter inability of the Commission to do everything at once.

For instance, it was imperative that Panama, which had the highest death rate and where the chance of a yellow fever epidemic was strongest, should be cared for first; yet most of the complaints as to the delay in taking care of Colon were due to the inability or unwillingness to appreciate this simple fact. Again, as the thousands of laborers are brought over and housed, it is not always possible at the outset to supply wooden walks and bath houses, because other more vital necessities have to be met; and in consequence, while most of the settlements have good bath houses, and, to a large extent at least, wooden walks, there are plenty of settlements where wooden walks have not yet been laid down, and I visited one where the bath houses have not been provided. But in this very settlement the frames of the bath houses are already up, and in every case the utmost effort is being made to provide the wooden walks. Of course, in some of the newest camps tents are used pending the building of houses. Where possible, I think detached houses would be preferable to the semidetached houses now in general use.

UNJUST CRITICISM.

Care and forethought have been exercised by the Commission, and nothing has reflected more credit upon them than their refusal either to go ahead too fast or to be deterred by the fear of criticism from not going ahead fast enough. It is curious to note the fact that many of the most severe critics of the Commission criticise them for precisely opposite reasons, some complaining bitterly that the work is not in a more advanced condition, while the others complain that it has been rushed with such haste that there has been insufficient preparation for the hygiene and comfort of the employees. As a matter of fact neither criticism is just. It would have been impossible to go quicker than the Commission has gone, for such quickness would have meant insufficient preparation. On the other hand, to refuse to do anything until every possible future contingency had been met would have caused wholly unwarranted delay. The right course to follow was exactly the course which has been followed. Every reasonable preparation was made in advance, the hygienic conditions in especial being made as nearly perfect as possible; while on the other hand there has been no timid refusal to push forward the work because of inability to anticipate every possible emergency, for, of course, many defects can only be shown by the working of the system in actual practice.

In addition to attending to the health of the employees, it is of course necessary to provide for policing the Zone. This is done by a police force which at present numbers over 200 men, under Captain Shanton. About one-fifth of the men are white and the others black. In different places I questioned some twenty or thirty of these men, taking them at random. They were a fine set, physically and in discipline. With one exception all the white men I questioned had served in the American Army, usually in the Philippines, and belonged to the best type of American soldier. Without exception the black policemen whom I questioned had served either in the British army or in the Jamaica or Barbados police. They were evidently contented, and were doing their work well. Where possible the policemen are used to control people of their own color, but in any emergency no hesitation is felt in using them indiscriminately.

Inasmuch as so many both of the white and colored employees have brought their families with them, schools have been established, the school service being under Mr. O'Connor. For the white pupils white American teachers are employed; for the colored pupils there are also some white American teachers, one Spanish teacher, and one colored American teacher, most of them being colored teachers from Jamaica, Barbados, and St. Lucia. The schoolrooms were good, and it was a pleasant thing to see the pride that the teachers were taking in their work and their pupils.

There seemed to me to be too many saloons in the Zone; but the new high-license law which goes into effect on January 1 next will probably close four-fifths of them. Resolute and successful efforts are being made to minimize and control the sale of liquor.

The cars on the passenger trains on the Isthmus are divided into first and second class, the difference being marked in the price of tickets. As a rule second-class passengers are colored and first-class passengers white; but in every train which I saw there were a number of white second-class passengers, and on two of them there were colored first-class passengers.

CARE OF EMPLOYEES.

Next in importance to the problem of sanitation, and indeed now of equal importance, is the problem of securing and caring for the mechanics, laborers, and other employees who actually do the work on the canal and the railroad. This great task has been under the control of Mr. Jackson Smith, and on the whole has been well done. At present there are some 6,000 white employees and some 19,000 colored employees on the Isthmus. I went over the different places where the different kinds of employees were working; I think I saw representatives of every type both at their work and in their homes; and I conversed with probably a couple of hundred of them all told, choosing them at random from every class and including those who came especially to present certain grievances. I found that those who did not come specifically to present grievances almost invariably expressed far greater content and satisfaction with the conditions than did those who called to make complaint.

Nearly 5,000 of the white employees had come from the United States. No man can see these young, vigorous men energetically doing their duty without a thrill of pride in them as Americans. They represent on the average a high class. Doubtless to Congress the wages paid them will seem high, but as a matter of fact the only general complaint which I found had any real basis among the complaints made to me upon the Isthmus was that, owing to the peculiar surroundings, the cost of living, and the distance from home, the wages were really not as high as they should be. In fact, almost every man I spoke to felt that he ought to be receiving more money—a view, however, which the average man who stays at home in the United States probably likewise holds as regards himself. I append figures of the wages paid, so that the Congress can judge the matter for itself. Later I shall confer on the subject with certain representative labor men here in the United States, as well as going over with Mr. Stevens, the comparative wages paid on the Zone and at home; and I may then communicate my findings to the canal committees of the two Houses.

QUARTERS GOOD AND SATISFACTORY.

The white Americans are employed, some of them in office work, but the majority in handling the great steam shovels, as engineers and conductors on the dirt trains, as machinists in the great repair shops, as carpenters and timekeepers, superintendents, and foremen of divisions and of gangs, and so on and so on. Many of them have brought down their wives and families; and the children when not in school are running about and behaving precisely as the American small boy and small girl behave at home. The bachelors among the employees live, sometimes in small separate houses, sometimes in large houses; quarters being furnished free to all the men, married and unmarried. Usually the bachelors sleep two in a room, as they would do in this country. I found a few cases where three were in a room; and I was told of, although I did not see, large rooms in which four were sleeping; for it is not possible in what is really a vast system of construction camps always to provide in advance as ample house room as the Commission intend later to give. In one case, where the house was an old French house with a leak in the roof, I did not think the accommodations were good. But in every other case among the scores of houses I entered at random, the accommodations were good; every room was neat and clean, usually having books, magazines, and small ornaments; and in short just such a room as a self-respecting craftsman would be glad to live in at home. The quarters for the married people were even better. Doubtless there must be here and there a married couple who, with or without reason, are not contented with their house on the Isthmus; but I never happened to strike such a couple. The wives of the steam-shovel men, engineers, machinists, and carpenters into whose houses I went, all with one accord expressed their pleasure in their home life and surroundings. Indeed I do not think they could have done otherwise. The houses themselves were excellent—bathroom, sitting room, piazza, and bedrooms being all that could be desired. In every house which I happened to enter the mistress of the home was evidently a good American housewife and helpmeet, who had given to the home life that touch of attractiveness which, of course, the bachelor quarters neither had nor could have.

FOOD SUPPLIES—A THIRTY-CENT MEAL.

The housewives purchase their supplies directly, or through their husbands, from the commissary stores of the Commission. All to whom I spoke agreed that the supplies were excellent, and all but two stated that there was no complaint to be made; these two complained that the prices were excessive as compared to the prices in the States. On investigation I did not feel that this complaint was well founded. The married men ate at home. The unmarried men sometimes ate at private boarding houses, or private messes, but more often, judging by the answers of those whom I questioned, at the government canteens or hotels where the meal costs 30 cents to each employee. This 30-cent meal struck me as being as good a meal as we get in the United States at the ordinary hotel in which a 50-cent meal is provided. Three-fourths of the men whom I questioned stated that the meals furnished at these government hotels were good, the remaining one-fourth that they were not good. I myself took dinner at the La Boca government hotel, no warning whatever having been given of my coming. There were two rooms, as generally in these hotels. In one the employees were allowed to dine without their coats, while in the other they had to put them on. The 30-cent meal included soup, native beef (which was good), mashed potatoes, peas, beets, chili con carne, plum pudding, tea, coffee—each man having as much of each dish as he desired. On the table there was a bottle of liquid quinine tonic, which two-thirds of the guests, as I was informed, used every day. There were neat tablecloths and napkins. The men, who were taking the meal at or about the same time, included railroad men, machinists, shipwrights, and members of the office force. The rooms were clean, comfortable, and airy, with mosquito screens around the outer piazza. I was informed by some of those present that this hotel, and also the other similar hotels, were every Saturday night turned into clubhouses where the American officials, the school-teachers, and various employees, appeared, bringing their wives, there being dancing and singing. There was a piano in the room, which I was informed was used for the music on these occasions. My meal was excellent, and two newspaper correspondents who had been on the Isthmus several days informed me that it was precisely like the meals they had been getting elsewhere at other Government hotels. One of the employees was a cousin of one of the Secret-Service men who was with me, and he stated that the meals had always been good, but that after a time he grew tired of them because they seemed so much alike.

NO CAUSE FOR COMPLAINT ABOUT FOOD.

I came to the conclusion that, speaking generally, there was no warrant for complaint about the food. Doubtless it grows monotonous after awhile. Any man accustomed to handling large masses of men knows that some of them, even though otherwise very good men, are sure to grumble about something, and usually about their food. Schoolboys, college boys, and boarders in boarding houses make similar complaints; so do soldiers and sailors. On this very trip, on one of the warships, a seaman came to complain to the second watch officer about the quality of the cocoa at the seamen's mess, saying that it was not sweet enough; it was pointed out to him that there was sugar on the table and he could always put it in, to which he responded that that was the cook's business and not his! I think that the complaint as to the food on the Isthmus has but little more foundation than that of the sailor in question. Moreover, I was given to understand that one real cause of complaint was that at the Government hotels no liquor is served, and some of the drinking men, therefore, refused to go to them. The number of men using the Government hotels is steadily increasing.

CHINESE AND OTHER LABOR.

Of the nineteen or twenty thousand day laborers employed on the canal, a few hundred are Spaniards. These do excellent work. Their foremen told me that they did twice as well as the West India laborers. They keep healthy and no difficulty is experienced with them in any way. Some Italian laborers are also employed in connection with the drilling. As might be expected, with labor as high priced as at present in the United States, it has not so far proved practicable to get any ordinary laborers from the United States. The American wage-workers on the Isthmus are the highly paid skilled mechanics of the types mentioned previously. A steady effort is being made to secure Italians, and especially to procure more Spaniards, because of the very satisfactory results that have come from their employment; and their numbers will be increased as far as possible. It has not proved possible, however, to get them in anything like the numbers needed for the work, and from present appearances we shall in the main have to rely, for the ordinary unskilled work, partly upon colored laborers from the West Indies, partly upon Chinese labor. It certainly ought to be unnecessary to point out that the American workingman in the United States has no concern whatever in the question as to whether the rough work on the Isthmus, which is performed by aliens in any event, is done by aliens from one country with a black skin or by aliens from another country with a yellow skin. Our business is to dig the canal as efficiently and as quickly as possible; provided always that nothing is done that is inhumane to any laborers, and nothing that interferes with the wages of or lowers the standard of living of our own workmen. Having in view this principle, I have arranged to try several thousand Chinese laborers. This is desirable both because we must try to find out what laborers are most efficient, and, furthermore, because we should not leave ourselves at the mercy of any one type of foreign labor. At present the great bulk of the unskilled labor on the Isthmus is done by West India negroes, chiefly from Jamaica, Barbados, and the other English possessions. One of the governors of the lands in question has shown an unfriendly disposition to our work, and has thrown obstacles in the way of our getting the labor needed; and it is highly undesirable to give any outsiders the impression, however ill founded, that they are indispensable and can dictate terms to us.

NEGRO LABORERS AND THEIR QUARTERS.

The West India laborers are fairly, but only fairly, satisfactory. Some of the men do very well indeed; the better class, who are to be found as foremen, as skilled mechanics, as policemen, are good men; and many of the ordinary day laborers are also good. But thousands of those who are brought over under contract (at our expense) go off into the jungle to live, or loaf around Colon, or work so badly after the first three or four days as to cause a serious diminution of the amount of labor performed on Friday and Saturday of each week. I questioned many of these Jamaica laborers as to the conditions of their work and what, if any changes, they wished. I received many complaints from them, but as regards most of these complaints they themselves contradicted one another. In all cases where the complaint was as to their treatment by any individual it proved on examination that this individual was himself a West India man of color, either a policeman, a storekeeper, or an assistant storekeeper. Doubtless there must be many complaints against Americans; but those to whom I spoke did not happen to make any such complaint to me. There was no complaint of the housing; I saw but one set of quarters for colored laborers which I thought poor, and this was in an old French house. The barracks for unmarried men are roomy, well ventilated, and clean, with canvas bunks for each man, and a kind of false attic at the top, where the trunks and other belongings of the different men are kept. The clothes are hung on clotheslines, nothing being allowed to be kept on the floor. In each of these big rooms there were tables and lamps, and usually a few books or papers, and in almost every room there was a Bible; the books being the property of the laborers themselves. The cleanliness of the quarters is secured by daily inspection. The quarters for the married negro laborers were good. They were neatly kept, and in almost every case the men living in them, whose wives or daughters did the cooking for them, were far better satisfied and of a higher grade than the ordinary bachelor negroes. Not only were the quarters in which these negro laborers were living much superior to those in which I am informed they live at home, but they were much superior to the huts to be seen in the jungles of Panama itself, beside the railroad tracks, in which the lower class of native Panamans live, as well as the negro workmen when they leave the employ of the canal and go into the jungles. A single glance at the two sets of buildings is enough to show the great superiority in point of comfort, cleanliness, and healthfulness of the Government houses as compared with the native houses.

NEGROES DO THEIR OWN COOKING.

The negroes generally do their own cooking, the bachelors cooking in sheds provided by the Government and using their own pots. In the different camps there was a wide variation in the character of these cooking sheds. In some, where the camps were completed, the kitchen or cooking sheds, as well as the bathrooms and water-closets, were all in excellent trim, while there were board sidewalks leading from building to building. In other camps the kitchens or cook sheds had not been floored, and the sidewalks had not been put down, while in one camp the bath houses were not yet up. In each case, however, every effort was being made to hurry on the construction, and I do not believe that the delays had been greater than were inevitable in such work. The laborers are accustomed to do their own cooking; but there was much complaint, especially among the bachelors, as to the quantity, and some as to the quality, of the food they got from the commissary department, especially as regards yams. On the other hand, the married men and their wives, and the more advanced among the bachelors, almost invariably expressed themselves as entirely satisfied with their treatment at the commissary stores; except that they stated that they generally could not get yams there, and had to purchase them outside. The chief complaint was that the prices were too high. It is unavoidable that the prices should be higher than in their own homes; and after careful investigation I came to the conclusion that the chief trouble lay in the fact that the yams, plantains, and the like are rather perishable food, and are very bulky compared to the amount of nourishment they contain, so that it is costly to import them in large quantities and difficult to keep them. Nevertheless, I felt that an effort should be made to secure them a more ample supply of their favorite food, and so directed; and I believe that ultimately the Government must itself feed them. I am having this matter looked into.

The superintendent having immediate charge of one gang of men at the Colon reservoir stated that he endeavored to get them to substitute beans and other nourishing food for the stringy, watery yams, because the men keep their strength and health better on the more nourishing food. Inasmuch, however, as they are accustomed to yams it is difficult to get them to eat the more strengthening food, and some time elapses before they grow accustomed to it. At this reservoir there has been a curious experience. It is off in the jungle by itself at the end of a couple of miles of a little toy railroad. In order to get the laborers there, they were given free food (and of course free lodgings); and yet it proved difficult to keep them, because they wished to be where they could reach the dramshop and places of amusement.

I was struck by the superior comfort and respectability of the lives of the married men. It would, in my opinion, be a most admirable thing if a much larger number of the men had their wives, for with their advent all complaints about food and cooking are almost sure to cease.

I had an interview with Mr. Mallet, the British consul, to find out if there was any just cause for complaint as to the treatment of the West India negroes. He informed me most emphatically that there was not, and authorized me to give his statement publicity. He said that not only was the condition of the laborers far better than had been the case under the old French Company, but that year by year the condition was improving under our own régime. He stated that complaints were continually brought to him, and that he always investigated them; and that for the last six months he had failed to find a single complaint of a serious nature that contained any justification whatever.

RECREATION AND AMUSEMENT.

One of the greatest needs at present is to provide amusements both for the white men and the black. The Young Men's Christian Association is trying to do good work and should be in every way encouraged. But the Government should do the main work. I have specifically called the attention of the Commission to this matter, and something has been accomplished already. Anything done for the welfare of the men adds to their efficiency and money devoted to that purpose is therefore properly to be considered as spent in building the canal. It is imperatively necessary to provide ample recreation and amusement if the men are to be kept well and healthy. I call the special attention of Congress to this need.

This gathering, distributing, and caring for the great force of laborers is one of the giant features of the work. That friction will from time to time occur in connection therewith is inevitable. The astonishing thing is that the work has been performed so well and that the machinery runs so smoothly. From my own experience I am able to say that more care had been exercised in housing, feeding, and generally paying heed to the needs of the skilled mechanics and ordinary laborers in the work on this canal than is the case in the construction of new railroads or in any other similar private or public work in the United States proper; and it is the testimony of all people competent to speak that on no other similar work anywhere in the Tropics—indeed, as far as I know, anywhere else—has there been such forethought and such success achieved in providing for the needs of the men who do the work.

I have now dealt with the hygienic conditions which make it possible to employ a great force of laborers, and with the task of gathering, housing, and feeding these laborers. There remains to consider the actual work which has to be done; the work because of which these laborers are gathered together—the work of constructing the canal. This is under the direct control of the Chief Engineer, Mr. Stevens, who has already shown admirable results, and whom we can safely trust to achieve similar results in the future.

WORK OF CONSTRUCTION.

Our people found on the Isthmus a certain amount of old French material and equipment which could be used. Some of it, in addition, could be sold as scrap iron. Some could be used for furnishing the foundation for filling in. For much no possible use could be devised that would not cost more than it would bring in.

The work is now going on with a vigor and efficiency pleasant to witness. The three big problems of the canal are the La Boca dams, the Gatun dam, and the Culebra cut. The Culebra cut must be made, anyway; but of course changes as to the dams, or at least as to the locks adjacent to the dams, may still occur. The La Boca dams offer no particular problem, the bottom material being so good that there is a practical certainty, not merely as to what can be achieved, but as to the time of achievement. The Gatun dam offers the most serious problem which we have to solve; and yet the ablest men on the Isthmus believe that this problem is certain of solution along the lines proposed; although, of course, it necessitates great toil, energy, and intelligence, and although equally, of course, there will be some little risk in connection with the work. If the huge earth dam now contemplated is thrown across from one foothill to the other we will have what is practically a low, broad, mountain ridge behind which will rise the inland lake. This artificial mountain will probably show less seepage, that is, will have greater restraining capacity than the average natural mountain range. The exact locality of the locks at this dam—as at the other dams—is now being determined. In April next Secretary Taft, with three of the ablest engineers of the country—Messrs. Noble, Stearns, and Ripley—will visit the Isthmus, and the three engineers will make the final and conclusive examinations as to the exact site for each lock. Meanwhile the work is going ahead without a break.

The Culebra cut does not offer such great risks; that is, the damage liable to occur from occasional land slips will not represent what may be called major disasters. The work will merely call for intelligence, perseverance, and executive capacity. It is, however, the work upon which most labor will have to be spent. The dams will be composed of the earth taken out of the cut and very possibly the building of the locks and dams will take even longer than the cutting in Culebra itself.

IN CULEBRA CUT.

The main work is now being done in the Culebra cut. It was striking and impressive to see the huge steam shovels in full play, the dumping trains carrying away the rock and earth they dislodged. The implements of French excavating machinery, which often stand a little way from the line of work, though of excellent construction, look like the veriest toys when compared with these new steam shovels, just as the French dumping cars seem like toy cars when compared with the long train of huge cars, dumped by steam plows, which are now in use. This represents the enormous advance that has been made in machinery during the past quarter of a century. No doubt a quarter of a century hence this new machinery, of which we are now so proud, will similarly seem out of date, but it is certainly serving its purpose well now. The old French cars had to be entirely discarded. We still have in use a few of the more modern, but not most modern, cars, which hold but 12 yards of earth. They can be employed on certain lines with sharp curves. But the recent cars hold from 25 to 30 yards apiece, and instead of the old clumsy methods of unloading them, a steam plow is drawn from end to end of the whole vestibuled train, thus immensely economizing labor. In the rainy season the steam shovels can do but little in dirt, but they work steadily in rock and in the harder ground. There were some 25 at work during the time I was on the Isthmus, and their tremendous power and efficiency were most impressive.

NEW RECORDS FOR EXCAVATION.

As soon as the type of canal was decided this work began in good earnest. The rainy season will shortly be over and then there will be an immense increase in the amount taken out; but even during the last three months, in the rainy season, steady progress is shown by the figures: In August, 242,000 cubic yards; in September, 291,000 cubic yards, and in October, 325,000 cubic yards. In October new records were established for the output of individual shovels as well as for the tonnage haul of individual locomotives. I hope to see the growth of a healthy spirit of emulation between the different shovel and locomotive crews, just such a spirit as has grown on our battle ships between the different gun crews in matters of marksmanship. Passing through the cut the amount of new work can be seen at a glance. In one place the entire side of a hill had been taken out recently by 27 tons of dynamite, which were exploded at one blast. At another place I was given a Presidential salute of 21 charges of dynamite. On the top notch of the Culebra cut the prism is now as wide as it will be; all told, the canal bed at this point has now been sunk about 200 feet below what it originally was. It will have to be sunk about 130 feet farther. Throughout the cut the drilling, blasting, shoveling, and hauling are going on with constantly increasing energy, the huge shovels being pressed up, as if they were mountain howitzers, into the most unlikely looking places, where they eat their way into the hillsides.

RAILWAY IMPROVEMENTS.

The most advanced methods, not only in construction, but in railroad management, have been applied in the Zone, with corresponding economies in time and cost. This has been shown in the handling of the tonnage from ships into cars, and from cars into ships on the Panama Railroad, where, thanks largely to the efficiency of General Manager Bierd, the saving in time and cost, has been noteworthy. My examination tended to show that some of the departments had (doubtless necessarily) become overdeveloped, and could now be reduced or subordinated without impairment of efficiency and with a saving of cost. The Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Shonts, has all matters of this kind constantly in view, and is now reorganizing the government of the Zone, so as to make the form of administration both more flexible and less expensive, subordinating everything to direct efficiency with a view to the work of the Canal Commission. From time to time changes of this kind will undoubtedly have to be made, for it must be remembered that in this giant work of construction, it is continually necessary to develop departments or bureaus, which are vital for the time being, but which soon become useless; just as it will be continually necessary to put up buildings, and even to erect towns, which in ten years will once more give place to jungle, or will then be at the bottom of the great lakes at the ends of the canal.

CRITICS AND DOUBTING THOMASES.

It is not only natural, but inevitable, that a work as gigantic as this which has been undertaken on the Isthmus should arouse every species of hostility and criticism. The conditions are so new and so trying, and the work so vast, that it would be absolutely out of the question that mistakes should not be made. Checks will occur. Unforeseen difficulties will arise. From time to time seemingly well-settled plans will have to be changed. At present 25,000 men are engaged on the task. After a while the number will be doubled. In such a multitude it is inevitable that there should be here and there a scoundrel. Very many of the poorer class of laborers lack the mental development to protect themselves against either the rascality of others or their own folly, and it is not possible for human wisdom to devise a plan by which they can invariably be protected. In a place which has been for ages a byword for unhealthfulness, and with so large a congregation of strangers suddenly put down and set to hard work there will now and then be outbreaks of disease. There will now and then be shortcomings in administration; there will be unlooked-for accidents to delay the excavation of the cut or the building of the dams and locks. Each such incident will be entirely natural, and, even though serious, no one of them will mean more than a little extra delay or trouble. Yet each, when discovered by sensation mongers and retailed to timid folk of little faith, will serve as an excuse for the belief that the whole work is being badly managed. Experiments will continually be tried in housing, in hygiene, in street repairing, in dredging, and in digging earth and rock. Now and then an experiment will be a failure; and among those who hear of it, a certain proportion of doubting Thomases will at once believe that the whole work is a failure. Doubtless here and there some minor rascality will be uncovered; but as to this, I have to say that after the most painstaking inquiry I have been unable to find a single reputable person who has so much as heard of any serious accusations affecting the honesty of the Commission or of any responsible officer under it. I append a letter dealing with the most serious charge, that of the ownership of lots in Colon; the charge was not advanced by a reputable man, and is utterly baseless. It is not too much to say that the whole atmosphere of the Commission breathes honesty as it breathes efficiency and energy. Above all, the work has been kept absolutely clear of politics. I have never heard even a suggestion of spoils politics in connection with it.

I have investigated every complaint brought to me for which there seemed to be any shadow of foundation. In two or three cases, all of which I have indicated in the course of this message, I came to the conclusion that there was foundation for the complaint, and that the methods of the Commission in the respect complained of could be bettered. In the other instances the complaints proved absolutely baseless, save in two or three instances where they referred to mistakes which the Commission had already itself found out and corrected.

SLANDERERS AND LIBELERS.

So much for honest criticism. There remains an immense amount of as reckless slander as has ever been published. Where the slanderers are of foreign origin I have no concern with them. Where they are Americans, I feel for them the heartiest contempt and indignation; because, in a spirit of wanton dishonesty and malice, they are trying to interfere with, and hamper the execution of, the greatest work of the kind ever attempted, and are seeking to bring to naught the efforts of their countrymen to put to the credit of America one of the giant feats of the ages. The outrageous accusations of these slanderers constitute a gross libel upon a body of public servants who, for trained intelligence, expert ability, high character and devotion to duty, have never been excelled anywhere. There is not a man among those directing the work on the Isthmus who has obtained his position on any other basis than merit alone, and not one who has used his position in any way for his own personal or pecuniary advantage.

PLAN TO BUILD BY CONTRACT.

After most careful consideration we have decided to let out most of the work by contract, if we can come to satisfactory terms with the contractors. The whole work is of a kind suited to the peculiar genius of our people; and our people have developed the type of contractor best fitted to grapple with it. It is of course much better to do the work in large part by contract than to do it all by the Government, provided it is possible on the one hand to secure to the contractor a sufficient remuneration to make it worth while for responsible contractors of the best kind to undertake the work; and provided on the other hand it can be done on terms which will not give an excessive profit to the contractor at the expense of the Government. After much consideration the plan already promulgated by the Secretary of War was adopted. This plan in its essential features was drafted, after careful and thorough study and consideration, by the Chief Engineer, Mr. Stevens, who, while in the employment of Mr. Hill, the president of the Great Northern Railroad, had personal experience of this very type of contract. Mr. Stevens then submitted the plan to the Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Shonts, who went carefully over it with Mr. Rogers, the legal adviser of the Commission, to see that all legal difficulties were met. He then submitted copies of the plan to both Secretary Taft and myself. Secretary Taft submitted it to some of the best counsel at the New York bar, and afterwards I went over it very carefully with Mr. Taft and Mr. Shonts, and we laid the plan in its general features before Mr. Root. My conclusion is that it combines the maximum of advantage with the minimum of disadvantage. Under it a premium will be put upon the speedy and economical construction of the canal, and a penalty imposed on delay and waste. The plan as promulgated is tentative; doubtless it will have to be changed in some respects before we can come to a satisfactory agreement with responsible contractors—perhaps even after the bids have been received; and of course it is possible that we can not come to an agreement, in which case the Government will do the work itself. Meanwhile the work on the Isthmus is progressing steadily and without any let up.

A SINGLE COMMISSIONER DESIRED.

A seven-headed commission is of course a clumsy executive instrument. We should have but one commissioner, with such heads of departments and other officers under him as we may find necessary. We should be expressly permitted to employ the best engineers in the country as consulting engineers.

I accompany this paper with a map showing substantially what the canal will be like when it is finished. When the Culebra cut has been made and the dams built (if they are built as at present proposed) there will then be at both the Pacific and Atlantic ends of the canal, two great fresh-water lakes, connected by a broad channel running at the bottom of a ravine, across the backbone of the Western Hemisphere. Those best informed believe that the work will be completed in about eight years; but it is never safe to prophesy about such a work as this, especially in the Tropics.

I am informed that representatives of the commercial clubs of four cities—Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, and St. Louis—the membership of which includes most of the leading business men of those cities, expect to visit the Isthmus for the purpose of examining the work of construction of the canal. I am glad to hear it, and I shall direct that every facility be given them to see all that is to be seen in the work which the Government is doing. Such interest as a visit like this would indicate will have a good effect upon the men who are doing the work, on one hand, while on the other hand it will offer as witnesses of the exact conditions men whose experience as business men and whose impartiality will make the result of their observations of value to the country as a whole.

CONFIDENT OF ULTIMATE SUCCESS.

Of the success of the enterprise I am as well convinced as one can be of any enterprise that is human. It is a stupendous work upon which our fellow-countrymen are engaged down there on the Isthmus, and while we should hold them to a strict accountability for the way in which they perform it, we should yet recognize, with frank generosity, the epic nature of the task on which they are engaged and its world-wide importance. They are doing something which will redound immeasurably to the credit of America, which will benefit all the world, and which will last for ages to come. Under Mr. Shonts and Mr. Stevens and Doctor Gorgas this work has started with every omen of good fortune. They and their worthy associates, from the highest to the lowest, are entitled to the same credit that we would give to the picked men of a victorious army; for this conquest of peace will, in its great and far-reaching effect, stand as among the very greatest conquests, whether of peace or of war, which have ever been won by any of the peoples of mankind. A badge is to be given to every American citizen who for a specified time has taken part in this work; for participation in it will hereafter be held to reflect honor upon the man participating just as it reflects honor upon a soldier to have belonged to a mighty army in a great war for righteousness. Our fellow-countrymen on the Isthmus are working for our interest and for the national renown in the same spirit and with the same efficiency that the men of the Army and Navy work in time of war. It behooves us in our turn to do all we can to hold up their hands and to aid them in every way to bring their great work to a triumphant conclusion.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 17, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message, together with the accompanying appendices, illustrations, and maps, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, does that include the illustrations?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so directed.

Mr. KEAN. Are the illustrations to be printed in the RECORD?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not in the RECORD. The message, with the accompanying appendices, illustrations, and maps, will be printed and referred, in the absence of objection, to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. ALDRICH. May I inquire what was the statement made by the Chair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again state the direction, which was that the message, together with the accompanying appendices, illustrations, and maps, will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. ALDRICH. But what goes into the RECORD, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair directed nothing to go into the RECORD. The message has been read, and that portion which was read will go into the RECORD.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. Are the illustrations contained in the message to be printed in the RECORD?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No; there has been no order to that effect.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

During the reading of the President's message concerning the Panama Canal,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

After the reading and reference of the President's message,

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 19523. An act to authorize Thomas J. Ewing and George B. Patton, of Catlettsburg, Ky.; Otto Burger, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Herbert Haynard, of Kenova, W. Va., and Charles Miller, of Huntington, W. Va., to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River;

H. R. 20988. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903; and

H. J. Res. 196. Joint resolution relating to the construction of a bridge at Fort Snelling, Minn.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 21574. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 22584. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

H. R. 21678. An act to provide for the extension of time within which homestead settlers may establish their residence upon certain lands which were heretofore a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, within the counties of Yellowstone and Rosebud, in the State of Montana, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAY OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 203) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1906, on the 20th day of said month; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is the customary joint resolution, and I ask that it may be considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1906, on the 20th day of said month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent

In executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 18, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 17, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 13, 1906.

To the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives:

Having been appointed chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I hereby tender my resignation as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and as a member thereof.

Yours, very truly,

ROBERT G. COUSINS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Representative WEEKS, chairman of Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

Representative KNOPF, chairman of Committee on Expenditures in Treasury Department.

Representative REYBURN, member of Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

Representative MOORE, of Pennsylvania, member of Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Representative BRUMM, member of Committee on Private Land Claims, and Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

Representative NELSON, member of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

Representative COUDREY, member of the Committee on Elections No. 2, and Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States, were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

POSTAL FRAUD ORDERS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 16548) to provide for judicial review for orders excluding persons from the use of United States mail facilities shall have the same privilege for the remainder of the session as is accorded bills reported by committees having leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the resolution is to give the bill known as "the fraud-order bill" a privileged status on the Calendar, so that it can be called up and considered on its merits at any time. It is not a privileged bill, and this resolution gives it that status. It is the object of the promoters of the legislation, after the holiday recess, when opportunity affords, to call it up and thoroughly discuss it and have it considered by the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the bill to which the gentleman refers been reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee after quite an extensive and exhaustive investigation of the subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Had it been reported out of the committee when committees were called in order in the House last week and when the Committee on Judiciary had recognition?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It had.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know why the bill was not then called up under the call of committees?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I asked the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to call it up, and he gave me as a reason that he did not care to occupy the time, or something like that. I felt that it ought to have been called up, but I think Members who are interested in the question desire some time to discuss it and want it put where it can be given more time than it could be given under the call of committees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman's resolution make the bill privileged?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The resolution makes the bill privileged—that is, it gives it a status on the Calendar of a privileged bill, which can be called up at any time when there is no other privileged matter before the House. That is the only object of the resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. Can the gentleman from Indiana state in a word what change the bill proposes to make in the existing law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will as briefly as I can. Under the existing law the Postmaster-General has the power, where evidence is submitted to him which satisfies him that any person is using the mails for fraudulent purposes, to issue an order withholding or denying him the right to use the mails—that is, he issues what is known as a "fraud order," denying such person the use of the mails. This may be done under the law without any notice whatever to the party affected, without any opportunity to appear and resist the issuance of the order, and when the order is once issued the courts have decided that, Congress having vested the discretion in the Postmaster-General, it is not subject to review in the courts.

It is the custom of the Postmaster-General, however, in most cases to have notice given to the parties and afford opportunities for them to present their defense. The chief evidence supplied to the Postmaster-General is in the form of confidential reports made by post-office inspectors, consisting of interviews with people throughout the country, men not under oath, not responsible criminally or civilly for anything they may say.

These reports are never accessible to the person who is accused of fraudulently using the mails; he has no opportunity to see them at any time under any circumstances, and one against whom a fraud order is improvidently issued, issued upon a mistake of facts—is absolutely without a remedy. He is branded before the public as the perpetrator of fraud. His right to the mails is absolutely cut off, and he is without recourse because there is no appeal to the courts on the question of fact. Now, the purpose of this bill is to give men who desire it the right to go into the courts and have questions of fact and law reviewed. The Postmaster-General is required to keep a fraud-order record, and when he is satisfied that any individual is using the mails for fraudulent purposes, he is required to give him notice, and, within a certain time after notice is issued, if no objection is made, the fraud order goes as a matter of course, but, pending this, and in order to prevent men imposing on the people, in order to cut off the career of green-goods concerns and fly-by-night institutions and get-rich-quick schemes, the Postmaster-General may peremptorily order the mail to be impounded in the post-office where the individual or corporation receives mail, to be held there pending investigation; and if the individual wants to go into court, he may commence proceedings in the Federal court having jurisdiction of the postmaster, and have a summary investigation of the law and the facts. The purpose of the bill is to give men who feel that they have been wronged, that fraud orders have been issued against them on improper or imperfect proof, an opportunity to have the matter heard according to established procedure in the court; but pending the proceeding, the Postmaster-General can have the mails withheld in the post-office where they would be delivered indefinitely until the matter is determined.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the bill open up a way for any liability for damages on the part either of the Government or the Postmaster-General, or is it simply a mandamus proceeding?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; it does not open up any way for liability; it does not fix any additional responsibilities, and it does not create any basis for actions of a civil character or any other kind, excepting it undertakes to give the right to the individual against whom a fraud order is to be issued to go into a court of record and have the facts investigated upon evidence that is recognized in courts of law.

Mr. PAYNE. What remedy is proposed under the bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The remedy I undertook to explain a moment ago is that the individual has the right to go into a court and commence proceedings to review the procedure for the order on the facts.

Mr. PAYNE. What judgment can he get on the facts? There must be some relief contemplated.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course, the Postmaster-General can not make the fraud order final in proceedings of that kind until there is a judgment of the court upholding him, declaring that the conduct of the person to be affected by the order has been such as to justify the issuance of the order. Then the order will be made final in contested cases. If the court decides otherwise, then the order is not to be issued.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is satisfied that the bill would not create any liability or open up the way for liability of a pecuniary nature on the part of the Postmaster-General or of the United States?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am satisfied of that.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does appeal lie from this judgment of the Federal court to the Court of Appeals?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I should presume it would; like any other—that in any other proceeding.

Mr. HINSHAW. On the part of the Postmaster or the man who is injured?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. HULL. In case of appeal the order of the Postmaster-General would be effective until the higher court had decided?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes. There is no opportunity to defraud the Government. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman sits down I would like to ask him a question. Has the bill which the gentleman has introduced, which is referred to in this resolution, the support of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was any hearing had before the committee as far as the gentleman knows? The gentleman will recognize that this matter is largely a matter that pertains to the regulation of postal affairs, rather than to matters that come within the purview of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to save some of my time to close the debate. I submitted the bill to Mr. OVERSTREET, the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads——

Mr. STAFFORD. I will state to the gentleman that I will be pleased to yield him some of my time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I submitted the bill to Mr. OVERSTREET, and he said the bill ought to be passed. He has had experience enough to believe that the bill ought to pass, and all I am asking now is to give the bill a status on the Calendar, so it can be taken up on its merits.

Mr. DALZELL. What is the motion of the gentleman?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The motion is to pass this resolution putting the bill on the Calendar as a privileged bill, so it can be taken up in the future and considered on its merits. I have not the time to go into the merits of the bill now, as it would take considerable time to debate it fully. I am simply asking now to have the bill put where the House can consider it, where it can be investigated and thoroughly considered, and then the House will be able to act intelligently.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask the gentleman one question, and that is whether under the present law or regulations of the Post-Office Department any notice is given to a person who is supposed to be violating postal laws?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In most of these cases notice is given, in some not. Now, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up the time of the House in a discussion of the merits of the bill, as the only purpose of the resolution which has been reported to the House is to provide for the consideration of the bill later on. I have no objection to its passage.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana what time is fixed for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no time fixed; the resolution simply gives it the status of a privileged measure.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Would the gentleman be likely to call up the bill before the holidays?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; it will not be called up until after the holidays.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am interested in the bill and in favor of its general principles.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the resolution was passed.

VALIDATING CERTAIN CERTIFICATES OF NATURALIZATION.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, and pass the following bill:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules, and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20465) to validate certain certificates of naturalization.

Be it enacted, etc., That naturalization certificates issued heretofore and under the act approved March 3, 1903, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," went into effect, which fail to show that the courts issuing said certificates complied with the requirements of section 39 of said act, but which were otherwise lawfully issued, are hereby declared to be as valid as though said certificates complied with said section, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this bill arises out of these facts: In March, 1903, there was approved an immigration bill which had, among other provisions, this:

All courts and tribunals and all judges and officers thereof having jurisdiction of naturalization proceedings or duties to perform in regard thereto, shall on final application for naturalization make careful inquiry into such matters, and before issuing the final order or certificate of naturalization cause to be entered of record the affidavit of the applicant and his witnesses so far applicable, reciting and affirming the truth of every material fact requisite for naturalization.

Then it had this:

All final orders and certificates of naturalization hereafter made shall show on their face specifically that said affidavits were duly made and recorded, and all orders and certificates that fail to show such facts shall be null and void.

It will be seen from this there was no duty cast on the applicant for naturalization. The form of these certificates was at that time as the will of the clerk of each particular court made. There were numbers of courts, county courts and higher courts, throughout the States which never heard of this law of 1903, and they went on issuing certificates of naturalization without complying with this law. All those naturalizations were void and are void. Applications come continually to the office of the Secretary of State for passports based on these certificates, and they are all rejected, as they necessarily must be.

Mr. MADDEN. Was there not a law passed during the last session of the House validating them?

Mr. BENNET of New York. There was not. It was introduced and passed this House, but the Senate failed to concur in all of it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] may be interested to know they amended it so as to apply to the criminal court of Cook County, Ill., only, and that at the request of his colleague [Mr. MANN] the Immigration Committee consented. The bill came before the House at a very late day of the session, too late for the bill to get through conference, and the House did concur so as to cover those particular cases in Cook County as to which question had been raised, and immediately this bill was introduced to cover the entire subject. Not only are passports impossible of granting on these certificates, but title to real property is affected, as in many of the States an alien can not take or transmit real property. And therefore there had been unquestionably hundreds and perhaps thousands of conveyances since March 3, 1903, that are absolutely void unless cured by some act such as this. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the statement that the gentleman has made shows the importance of the legislation of 1903. It was important legislation. It did effect radical changes in the methods by which a great many of unworthy and undesirable citizens are thrust into the civic forces of this country. The gentleman tells us as one of the reasons why this bill should pass a most alarming condition of affairs. I can scarcely conceive it to be possible when he announces to us that very many of the courts were entirely uninformed as to the passage of this law, courts that had to deal directly with the law, courts whose duty it was to be familiar with the law, courts which had obligations and duties imposed upon them by the law. The gentleman tells us that these tribunals were entirely uninformed of the existence and character of the statute. Mr. Chairman, if that is true, then we ought to debate this matter long enough to bring this subject to the attention of everybody in the United States. This is an important subject. The gentleman has told us of the great interests that are in jeopardy by reason of the failure of Government officials to perform their sworn duties. Many titles, he says, are in jeopardy. The rights of traveling citizens are affected, and the protection of the Government withdrawn from them because of these negligently criminal offenses on the part of the courts. I am unwilling that these acts should be validated. It is very much better that the individuals should suffer, the individuals who sought naturalization, who ought to have known the possibilities of the law of naturalization, who had the duty imposed upon them to know under what terms and by what processes the valuable boon of citizenship should be given—it is very much better that those persons who now, having been advised, should go back and secure that naturalization in the proper way, which, perhaps, in some instances, at least, for fraudulent purposes, they did not seek in the proper way.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] permit an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it not be imposible for those people, whose naturalization is defective because of the things stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], to make a new application and be naturalized in accordance with the law at the present time?

Mr. HEPBURN. Undoubtedly. If they are entitled to naturalization, if they have not received it, if the courts have been fatally in error as to their duties, if they can not have the records made as they should be made and receive the certificate that they are entitled to under the law, they can not be deprived of that right by the negligence and failure to perform a duty of an officer of the Government. The doors of the courts are open to them now, and they ought to be required to pursue the course all other persons do under similar circumstances. No one knows what there is in this broad blanket that the gentleman proposes to throw over all the courts during the last three years. How many cases are there of this kind? How many men are there that will secure rights under this legislation, depriving others of rights, perhaps, and what are the amounts involved? The gentleman has contented himself by simply telling us that there are very many of them. I do not know how many individual cases there may be; I do not know how many thousands or tens of thousands or millions of dollars may be involved in these questioned property rights, and therefore I think we ought to have some information upon as important a matter as this.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Is it not the duty of the court, if a man has made a declaration of his intention and has paid for his naturalization that is wrongfully issued, without this legislation to make good and to give him good and substantial papers in place of those he now holds?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there would be no difficulty in the case of anybody who suffers under the disabilities described by the gentleman in going into court, and if he had failed to furnish these affidavits and these proofs under which the courts obtained jurisdiction—mind you, if they had failed thus far by making good their own default and vesting the court with jurisdiction, they can then secure the proper records to be made and secure the issuance of the proper certificate to be had, preserving all of their rights. And that is a very much safer way, in my judgment, than it is to have this blanket process, to enter upon a domain we do not know how broad it may be, starting on a way we do not know where it is to end, and jeopardizing the rights of other persons that we now have no ken of.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask the gentleman whether these persons whose rights of citizenship are now sought to be cured have not already been naturalized in the same way that the great majority of the naturalized citizens of the United States have been naturalized?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I presume that may be so. I do not know, and the gentleman has not informed us. But I will assume that is so. I want to remind the gentleman from Ohio that Congress solemnly resolved that these older methods were obsolete, they would no longer serve; that under these old methods there have been frauds perpetrated. The gentleman called attention to this condition in the courts. I do not know where they are.

Mr. KEIFER. The State courts.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know what the motives or influence may have been. The gentleman says it is ignorance, and no motive at all. I do not know what political considerations there may have been. It might have been men were trying to bring in aliens in this improper manner and get them naturalized, so that finally they might make an assault upon the ballot. I do not know. We determined that that should not continue. Therefore, the argument that may be drawn and that the gentleman seems disposed to draw, that they were following the old methods, will not suffice to influence the judgment of this House, when, at least largely, the membership has decided that the old method should no longer obtain and that the newer method was the better one. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that the State courts in Iowa and in many of the other States have overlooked that statute.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why do you say Iowa?

Mr. KEIFER. Because I am informed the State courts generally throughout the United States for a time overlooked the statute and naturalized, for that reason, under the old law and old provision. They did it in my State; and these people who made the application were not to blame so much as the courts, if anybody was to blame.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why can the gentleman say that the applicant for naturalization is not to blame if he does not comply with the provisions of the law?

Mr. KEIFER. Because he makes his application on blanks that the court officers furnish him.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, you must remember that a man who seeks naturalization comes asking for benefit; he comes asking for privilege, a high privilege, a privilege that is given to him with limitations, limitations that he must have knowledge of. Is it possible that the gentleman proposes to make an argument in favor of naturalization for a man who is so densely ignorant of our laws and our customs and our methods that he does not even know the statute and provisions of the statute that confer upon him this great boon of citizenship? It is not a light matter to confer upon a man citizenship of the United States, to dilute, as we often do, our political power in the States by the admission, in very many instances, of improper persons.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question for information?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. As I understand it, this thirty-ninth section of the act of March, 1903, provides substantially that no anarchist shall be naturalized. It also provides on the face of every certificate it shall appear that the party has made that fact appear by affidavits prescribed under the terms of the act. Now, do I understand that this proposed law is to validate certificates that neither show that he is not an anarchist nor that he has complied with the terms of the act?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what the gentleman from New York stated in his opening address, and that is one of the reasons that he gave for this most astonishing method.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I do not think it is worth while consuming the time of this House to do away with the force of the act of the last Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield to any gentleman who desires to oppose the passage of this bill. [After a pause.] I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has sixteen minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Iowa nine.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of Congress we passed a new naturalization law. Under that law the irregularities that have been mentioned as having occurred under the act of 1903 will become absolutely impossible. The condition is simply this: In section 39 of the act of March, 1903, the duty was not imposed upon the applicant but upon the court. At that time there were in the United States some five thousand different courts having jurisdiction under the naturalization laws. Many of these courts did not follow the provisions of this statute. They did not change the form of their naturalization certificates. It may be that they required the affidavits. It may be that they examined the applicants and determined that they were in every way qualified for citizenship; but when they came to issuing the certificate they used the old form of certificate, and did not place in that certificate what section 39 required should be stated, namely, that the provision in question had been followed.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN. If, as a matter of fact, section 39 has been complied with in these cases, is there anything to prevent the court that issued the certificates from amending the certificate and making the proper recital?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; I should think so.

Mr. MARTIN. What?

Mr. BONYNGE. They can not go back and change that certificate now.

Mr. MARTIN. It seems to me if there was a mere omission in form, if the wrong form has been used, the court that issued that might correct it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Let me suggest to the gentleman that some of the courts that issued those certificates do not now have the right to naturalize applicants.

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly. Many of the 5,000 courts then having jurisdiction in naturalization cases, have been deprived of that jurisdiction under the new naturalization law passed at the last session of Congress. Now, at the last session, in addition to passing the general naturalization law, we did pass, as the gentleman from New York has stated, a bill authorizing the validating of certificates issued by the criminal court of Cook County. There has been some question as to whether that court was authorized, under the law then in force, to issue naturalization certificates. The court had issued a great many such certificates, and those certificates had not been issued in accordance with this section. We have validated all the certificates issued by that court, and the purpose of this legislation is only to correct, not the error of the applicants, but the error of the courts that were authorized to issue naturalization certificates.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not true that under the recent naturalization law blanks have been furnished by the United States Government to all these courts, so that errors like this will never occur again?

Mr. BONYNGE. Certainly. All the certificates and all the forms to be issued in naturalization proceedings are now regulated by the law enacted at the last session. They are all provided by the Federal Government and furnished to the courts that have jurisdiction in such cases. The fault was not with the applicant. The fault was with Congress in the form of the legislation that we had. We allowed this loose method to go on, and, in my judgment, it would now be wrong to work a hardship upon the applicant, not because of any fault of his, but because of our failure properly to regulate naturalization proceedings, thereby depriving many worthy citizens of their right of naturalization when they have in every respect complied with the law. The same reasons that actuated us in correcting the error in the court of Cook County certainly should control us in respect to all other courts. It only affects this one particular feature of the law and does not in any other way validate the certificate. Unless the certificate of naturalization was properly issued in every other respect this law will not validate it, and it only validates the omission of the court. Nothing else is cured or corrected by this legislation. In my judgment the bill ought to pass.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, one further question.

Mr. BONYGNE. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Section 39, to which the gentleman has referred, seems to require the court to make certain examination as to the qualification of the applicant.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Upon this particular question?

Mr. BONYNGE. It does.

Mr. MARTIN. Now, if this bill is passed into law, would not the effect of it be to validate the certificate in a case where the court had not complied with the law in this respect?

Mr. BONYNGE. Not at all, because the bill provides that it shall only validate the certificates in the cases where the certificate itself has failed to show upon its face that which the law required, and then only to validate those certificates in cases where the law was in all other respects complied with.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; but not in that respect——

Mr. BONYNGE. But in that one respect only, namely, the failure of the court in the issuance of its certificate to show upon its face that it had complied with the requirements of the law. And the bill provides that it only validates certificates in such cases. The certificate must in all other respects be legal, or else it will not be validated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the explanation made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] it impresses me that there is need to have the law passed, because if we do not pass it there will be hundreds and thousands of certificates of naturalization held by people throughout the country who believe they have the right to citizenship, and will never know that they have not that right until they make application for a passport or papers of some other similar character. It has not been the fault of the applicants that these certificates were not in proper form, but it was the fault of the courts that did not furnish the proper blanks necessary to carry out the law As all the certificates that were issued prior to the enactment of the law of 1903 were in the same form as those issued afterwards, that are by this bill sought to be validated, there can not be any great harm in validating all the certificates, so that all the people who have taken out certificates will know once and for all that they are full-fledged citizens of the United States.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no Member of this House would want, by withholding support of this bill, to do injustice to anyone who honestly sought citizenship in this country. The purpose of the bill is not to correct errors of the applicant, but rather to correct errors or oversights made by the courts in issuing the certificate.

The persons who have been naturalized within the time covered by this bill are not the undesirable persons referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. The persons who are to be affected by this bill are men of industry and economy who have purchased property. That title to such property is affected by the oversight of the courts in issuing the certificates referred to. The question may not be raised during the lifetime of the man who has by his industry secured a home for his family. The question may not be raised until after his death, and then it may be raised to the injury of those who have been left and provided for by him. I think that, in view of the fact that this is a bill to correct oversights of the court rather than of the applicant, there ought not to be any hesitation whatever in passing this law and protecting those who have acquired property and shown themselves to be honest and industrious citizens.

The Republic has not been populated wholly by native-born American citizens. Many citizens who have contributed to its greatness and glory were foreign born and have sought citizenship here in the way provided by law through the courts. They have not the responsibility in the methods pursued in naturalization, but the responsibility is upon the courts, and where the courts err the applicant, the man made a citizen, ought not to be held responsible for the error and oversight of the courts and made to suffer. I sincerely hope that the bill may pass.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, as I intend to use the balance of my time in one speech, I would like to have the gentleman from Iowa use his time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to use all my time. If any gentleman desires, I will yield to him. If not, I would like to correct some errors gentlemen have unwittingly fallen into in regard to the character of this legislation. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has just said that this legislation is to correct defects resulting not from the conduct of the applicant for naturalization, but to correct errors of our courts. I deny this. That is not the language of the law. There are duties imposed upon the individual as well as upon the courts. Let me read the statute:

All courts and tribunals and all judges and officers thereof having jurisdiction of naturalization proceedings or duties to perform in regard thereto shall, on final application for naturalization, make careful inquiry into such matters, and before issuing the final order or certificate of naturalization cause to be entered of record the affidavit of the applicant and his witnesses so far as applicable, reciting and affirming the truth of every material fact requisite for naturalization. All final orders and certificates of naturalization hereafter made shall show on their face specifically that said affidavits were duly made and recorded, and all orders and certificates that fail to show such facts shall be null and void.

Here is a duty imposed upon the applicant. It is an affidavit from the applicant that must be made; it is the affidavit of his witnesses that must be made and filed, not simply reciting the facts that exclude him from the class of anarchists, but recites every material fact essential to naturalization—everything—facts that the courts can not be advised of except through his affidavits—the affidavits that are antecedent to the making of the record, that must be completed before the duties of the clerk in making the record begins, or the duty of the court in authorizing the certificate begins.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. As I understand, if this affidavit has not been made of the general qualifications of the applicant, his certificate may be invalidated without the affidavit being filed?

Mr. HEPBURN. If this act passes, these men are citizens, and they are citizens without having shown these material facts that are essential to confer the right of citizenship.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to obtain the view of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] as to whether as this bill is drawn its effect would not be to cure cases in which courts have not entered at all into the investigation of the facts.

Mr. HEPBURN. Undoubtedly. It cures cases that have been made since the passage of the act of March 3, 1903.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the language of the bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. The bill provides that naturalization certificates issued heretofore and under the act approved March 3, 1903, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," went into effect, which failed to show that the courts issuing said certificates complied with the requirements of section 39 of said act, but which were otherwise lawfully issued, are hereby declared to be as valid as though said certificates complied with said section, but shall not be by this act further validated or legalized. That is, simply in those cases where the certificate failed to show that the law had been complied with, but the other provisions of law must have been complied with.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is again in error. Let me read the statute:

All final orders and certificates of naturalization hereafter made shall show on their face specifically that said affidavits were duly made and recorded, and all orders and certificates that fail to show such facts shall be null and void.

The certificate must show that the affidavits were filed.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, then, if the certificate does not show that, if the affidavits were filed, if they were made a matter of record, if the court had particularly inquired into all of these matters and the recitals of the records so show, it is a small matter for that man who holds this defective certificate to appear before the court and ask for the certificate that he is entitled to. It is like the correction of any mere technical error in a decree, which can be corrected in that way. There is no other party to the record. No notice has to be served upon anybody else. All this man has to do in order to secure this boon of naturalization is to go into that court and say that that certificate is informal. But I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that but few instances will be found where there is simply an omission in the certificate to recite facts that have in fact occurred. If the affidavits are filed, if there is this investigation, it is such a departure from the old method as to do away with the suggestion of the gentleman from New York as to ignorance of the courts. The party was not ignorant. He knew, or his attorney that appeared for him knew, what it was necessary to recite in that certificate. These are important matters, prerequisites essential to the jurisdiction of the court, without which the court has no power to act, without which the certificate of the court is void if he issues it, and it seems to me they always would have been complied with.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. You would certainly have to give notice to the applicant in some way that the certificate was illegal. The gentleman says that they should know that it is the law.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is his duty to know that he is not naturalized.

Mr. BONYNGE. This section 39 was section 39 of a law entitled "An act to regulate immigration." This naturalization section never had any place in that law, and it is very probable that the courts did not know that a law passed to regulate immigration provided new rules for the court in issuing naturalization certificates, and it is because of that fact that the courts and the applicants were not familiar with this provision of law.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen are treating this subject as though a boon were conferred upon the Government and the people when naturalization was accepted by one of these men. I do not so regard it. I know of no boon that can be given to a man greater than that of citizenship in the Republic. It ought to be a thing valued by him. He ought to know something about the requirements. He ought to know something about the benefits conferred, and I am unwilling to treat the subject in this way, to treat it, in fact, with levity and make a farce of it, to make these requirements, and then when men contemptuously refuse to obey them to come in with this piece of blanket legislation that the gentleman himself can not tell within thousands of cases, perhaps, how far reaching it is to be. The gentleman knows nothing with regard to the property rights interested, except in the most vague manner, yet he comes to us with this piece of legislation to cover all of the cases and attempts to pass it with twenty minutes of argument under a suspension of the rules. I think that is going a long way toward treating the subject of naturalization with contempt.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that the contempt was on the part of the applicant or on the part of the court, when the duty was imposed upon the court to make its certificate contain this showing and the court failed to comply with the law? Who was guilty of contempt?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not going to enter into any controversy with the gentleman as to who was most derelict of duty. The court ought to have known, and the man who seeks naturalization in the United States ought to know, the law under which it is conferred upon him.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, this bill applies not only to the man who took out naturalization, but to his wife and his children, and to anyone, native born or alien born, who bought real estate from him and holds title through him. If it applied merely to the original alien I would not advocate the bill, because, as the gentleman says, he could go back to the court and get his certificate corrected or at least take out a new naturalization; but here we have created a situation where county courts, which now by the action of this Congress are not permitted to naturalize any more, have, in ignorance of the statute, which was a section in an immigration and not a naturalization bill, issued invalid certificates.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Just a question.

Mr. MARTIN. Then, if I understand, under your view of this proposed act persons would have their certificates corrected where the court had not gone into an inquiry of the facts required by section 39.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not at all; because this law only validates certificates otherwise lawfully issued.

Mr. MARTIN. It seems to me it clearly covers cases where the court had not gone into the inquiry required by section 39.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not at all. In large cities, such as Pittsburg, and such a city as the one in which I live, the State and Federal courts comply literally with the Federal law.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. If your theory of your bill is correct then you would have a great number of naturalization certificates in the hands of people, the certificate on its face not showing whether it was a valid naturalization paper or not. One would have to go to the court and inquire of the record to find out whether one of these people with this paper in his possession was a citizen or not.

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; not if this bill passes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. If this bill passes, as I understand, the naturalization paper will not be valid unless the court's record contains these affidavits.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Unless the other steps were taken, yes. I will say this to the gentleman, that that same criticism applies to every naturalization certificate issued prior to the uniform naturalization law which we passed last year, and that was one of the reasons for passing that law.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I understand this identical bill passed the last session, did it not?

Mr. BENNET of New York. No, sir.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Did we not pass this law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. This bill?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. This bill in the House.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman will permit an answer not quite categorical, I have just answered the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I heard the answer to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BENNET of New York. A bill containing this exact language, which had another section, was passed in the last days of the session. The other section cured other defects. That bill was amended to cover the court of Cook County, Ill., where they had 20,000 invalid naturalizations. Questions had been raised. The Senate concurred in our action to that extent. At the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the committee recommended concurrence and this House concurred. The House has once passed this subject-matter.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Is it not true, then, if we now pass this bill we will be sending over to the Senate precisely the same proposition which the Senate during this Congress rejected?

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is absolutely correct; but we have hopes of changing the mind of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GAINES of West Virgina. Does not the gentleman then think he is not only asking us to vote to suspend the rules of the House, but to vote to suspend the rules regulating the proprieties of legislative intercourse between the House and the Senate?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not in the slightest degree.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM. If these affidavits are properly filed before the court, what is to prevent the court from sending word to have those certificates brought in and stamped in accordance with the law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. You can not find the people.

Mr. GRAHAM. You can notify the ones they have naturalized.

Mr. BENNET of New York. They do not know where they are now. If a man gets naturalized in Pittsburg and goes out to Oklahoma, and moves to Minnesota——

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has expired.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended? If so, I ask unanimous consent that time for the discussion of this measure may be continued for twenty minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will change my request and ask for half an hour, fifteen minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and fifteen minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that the time be extended for half an hour, fifteen minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and fifteen minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I do not care for five minutes. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state my understanding of this bill. Section 39 of the act of 1903 requires every person who applies for naturalization to do something; and that is, to satisfy the court he is not an anarchist, that he is in sympathy with the Government of the United States. The measure considered here this morning will validate every naturalization certificate without requiring the person who applies to make the affidavit required by the thirty-ninth section of the act of 1903. Assuming that to be so, then those already naturalized, but whose certificates are deficient, will not be required to state their opinions upon the form of our Government and make the affidavit requiring them to subscribe thereto. They will not be required to qualify that they are not anarchists. They will escape the provisions of existing law. These applicants will have their certificates without having complied with the requirements of this section. Furthermore, there is nothing in this act to require their appearance in court. The court of its own motion may validate all of these certificates, and the very person against whom the thirty-ninth section of the act of 1903 was directed will be exempt from its provisions. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if this measure should become a law, it will entirely nullify the purpose of section 39, which we were so anxious to have inserted in the act of 1903—to provide against the naturalization of anarchists. That is all the time I care for.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a very important bill and a dangerous one. The report accompanying it sets forth that in violation of the act of 1903 there have been thousands of certificates of naturalization issued which are null and void because there was no compliance with the requirements of that act; that there should be filed an affidavit setting forth, among other things, that the applicant did not possess those disqualifications enumerated in the act which are usually attributed to those persons whom we commonly style anarchists, and also "reciting and affirming the truth of every material fact requisite for naturalization." The certificate issued by the court must show compliance with this requirement.

This bill proposes to make all those illegal naturalization certificates valid just the same as if all the requirements of law had been complied with. To that I am opposed.

It is said in explanation that neither the court nor the applicants were familiar with the provisions of the act of Congress. There is an old legal maxim that "ignorance of the law excuses no man." Certainly it does not excuse a court or an applicant for naturalization. I am one of those who believe that naturalization is a privilege that ought not to be carelessly or illegally conferred——

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Ought a man's transferees of real estate to suffer for the fault of the court when the man is without fault?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the man was not without fault—his counsel was not without fault—and whether they were or not he ought not to obtain naturalization without complying with the requirements of law.

It is a very simple matter if the act was complied with and the affidavit filed. In that case it has become part of the records of the court, and it would be a very simple matter to apply to that court and have the proper certificate issued. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney-General of the United States is now hunting out thousands of cases of fraudulent naturalization. I know one judicial district in which the United States district attorney has been informed by the Department of Justice that there have been some thousands of cases of fraudulent naturalization certificates. He is instructed to look them up. Now, while he is looking them up, while the Department of Justice is prosecuting them, it is proposed by one brief exactment that we shall make them all valid, no matter what the conditions under which they were issued.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman contend that the passage of this bill will in any way prevent the Attorney-General or the district attorneys in the various districts under the bill passed the last session of Congress from proceeding under the provisions of that bill to have declared null the certificates that were illegal?

Mr. OLMSTED. The trouble with this bill is that it will make them legal, although they are now illegal.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does not the gentleman see that he makes it legal only as to one requirement? The language of the bill is that the certificate which fails to show that the court issuing the certificate complied with the law, but which was otherwise legally issued, was valid. That is, all the other provisions must be complied with. This examination must have been had, and it is only in cases where the court simply failed to give a certificate showing that it complied with the law that this bill applies, and if passed, it validates those only where the certificates fail to contain the statement required by the act of 1903.

Mr. OLMSTED. Who on earth would investigate each case and find out whether all the other requirements of the law had been complied with? Who would know? Here you propose to enact a general sweeping ratification and validation. There is nobody whose duty it would be to investigate to ascertain whether the other requirements had been complied with. But, Mr. Speaker, this particular requirement was the most important that the law imposed, that there must be an affidavit reciting affirmatively the truth of all the facts necessary to naturalization. If that affidavit has not been filed, they are not entitled to naturalization and never ought to have been granted certificates conferring that right and privilege.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman speaks of the requirement that the affidavit should be filed as the most important requirement. I will agree with him, but this bill does not, as I tried to show to the gentleman, affect that provision of the law. The requirement that the certificate itself should show that the affidavit was filed the gentleman will hardly contend was so important if, as a matter of fact, it was filed. Now, this law simply deals with the certificate and nothing else.

Mr. OLMSTED. The act of 1903 says that all courts shall make an inquiry as to the truth of the facts in addition to the affidavits. This act says that if the certificate fails to show that the affidavit was filed or that the court made the inquiry, nevertheless the certificate shall be valid.

Mr. BONYNGE. If otherwise legal.

Mr. OLMSTED. But where is the evidence that the courts did make the inquiry, if the record does not show it and the certificate does not show it? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very dangerous bill. It validates thousands of naturalization certificates which never ought to have been issued and are absolutely illegal and void to-day.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I think we are running off into side issues somewhat and discussing questions that do not and can not arise under this bill should it become a law. The trouble urged against it is that the immigrant to this country did not come here possessed of knowledge as to the precise terms of a section of an immigration bill that related to naturalization. I make a guess that nine-tenths of the Members of this House, some of whom participated in the passage of that bill, do not remember the terms of that section. I understand that many of the State courts, in all of the States of the Union, forgot or ignored it for a time at least; and to-day we are discussing the question as to whether we shall apply a severe rule to these immigrants because they were not able to advise their attorneys, if they had attorneys, and to advise the courts that they appealed to to grant them naturalization as to what the law of the land was, and they proceeded, under all the solemnity of the old law, and succeeded in getting naturalization certificates that are substantially, if not precisely, in accord with the naturalization certificates issued in the United States for more than one hundred years prior to 1903. And yet we hesitate to say whether persons who have been thus unfortunate shall be in a situation where they can make valid, or where the courts can make valid, their certificates. We hesitate to say that their children, whose naturalization may depend upon this, shall become naturalized, because we imagine that somehow or other these ignorant immigrants could not instruct the State courts and lawyers of this country just how to prepare a certificate that was not in exact accordance with a section, not of a naturalization law, but of an immigration law. There is where we are. I think that is sufficient to be said. There is no attempt by this bill to validate fraudulent naturalization papers, for it is carefully drawn on that subject. It only undertakes to make valid the certificates which are not in form according to section 39 of the immigration law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think the gentleman is mistaken in understanding that this bill relates only to the certificate. The act of 1903 requires an inquiry by the court into all these matters. This bill says that if the courts issuing the certificates have failed to comply with the requirements of that act, nevertheless the certificates shall be valid.

Mr. BONYNGE. Oh, no.

Mr. KEIFER. Read the closing sentence of the bill which you have in your hand.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That ought to be read in connection with the beginning of the section. That is, that naturalization certificates issued heretofore, which fail to show, and so forth.

Mr. BONYNGE. It is the naturalization certificate that is validated.

Mr. OLMSTED. Certificates which fail to show that they complied with the requirements of the section?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. And one of the requirements is not only that the certificate shall show the filing of an affidavit, but that the affidavit shall be filed with the court, and that the court shall make inquiry into all those matters.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is not the effect of it.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is capable of that construction.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will read the last clause of the bill he will see it is very carefully drawn, and that it does not validate anything save and except the defect in the certificate. I think I am substantially correct in that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some difference of judgment and opinion between Members of the House as to what would be the effect of the passage of this bill. I agree entirely with the general statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] upon that subject. I believe that the effect of the passage of this bill would be not only to validate certificates in which a mere recital was not made in compliance with section 39, but to validate also the certificates in cases where the other provisions of section 39 were not in fact complied with. In his argument the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] held and takes the other position. The gentleman says, however, that section 39 of the act of March, 1903, is not a section in a naturalization law, but an immigration law, and that many of the courts and the parties applying for naturalization knew nothing about it. It is difficult to conceive of a case where a court has had its attention called to the language of the anti-anarchistic clause and has made the examination required by the section, and yet has failed to recite this fact on the face of the certificate, because the section itself is positive that no certificate shall be valid that does not state that on its face. There is little doubt that in all cases in which the court has actually made the examination and required the person applying for naturalization to give an affidavit that he is in sympathy with the principles of our Constitution and Government the certificate would, in fact, show it. I believe this is a most important provision. I believe in cases in which it has not been complied with the certificates ought not to be validated, and therefore oppose this bill.

As the gentleman from Iowa said, the boon of citizenship in the United States is of sufficient dignity and importance that every important provision that has been made in the statute should be understood by the person applying, and should be obeyed and followed by the court giving its final certificate.

Now, so far as the title to land passed by the Government of the United States under the homestead law is concerned, I will call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to the fact that a person does not have to have taken out a final certificate in order to be a valid homesteader, and if the preliminary declaration has been in proper form such a person can still apply and obtain a correct and valid final certificate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that that may be true, and I have no doubt it is, as to the certificate of a homesteader. But suppose the naturalized citizen under this law within the last three years has purchased from a citizen a homestead or home, and has since then passed title to another, who was a native-born American citizen, in what way may the defect in the title to that property be cured?

Mr. MARTIN. That would depend entirely upon the statutes of the State in which the transfer was made. But be that as it may, I take the position that since the passage of the act of 1903 no person not examined by the court as to his disposition toward the Constitution and principles of our Government ought to be admitted to citizenship, whatever may be the effect upon the claim of title to any particular piece of land. I take the position that the effect of the passage of this act would be to validate a certificate where the necessary affidavit had not been required and no proper examination made by the court at all, and for that reason I am opposed to it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Why can not it be provided in this bill that the applicant whose certificate is not regular in form, because the affidavit was not made at the time he applied—to repeat, why can not we provide that when the applicant makes application for correction of his certificate he should make the affidavit provided for in section 39, and that the affidavit should be filed nunc pro tunc?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN. It seems to me that where the court has in fact made the examination there is no need of legislation. If this can be shown, that the court has made the examination and conformed to the law in every respect except as to the form of the certificate, the court could cure the certificate by conforming it to the facts disclosed in the examination.

Mr. BONYNGE. Has the gentleman taken into account the fact that we have taken the jurisdiction away in reference to matters of this kind from the court?

Mr. MARTIN. The effect of that would not be to deprive the court of the right to complete any case in which it originally had jurisdiction. The court would still retain jurisdiction to give a proper certificate.

Mr. BONYNGE. Under the terms of the act the certificate is given of the time of the examination.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman state that in the cases in which section 39 has been complied with by the making of the affidavit, and where the applicants have been examined by the court, and the section followed in all respects except as to the form of the certificate, that can not be cured by the court?

Mr. BONYNGE. That is my opinion.

Mr. MARTIN. That is not my opinion.

Mr. BONYNGE. It is my opinion further that this bill does not affect any case except those in which the court has complied with all the requirements of the statutes until it comes to the statute affecting the certificate of naturalization.

Mr. MARTIN. It is my opinion that any court that had its attention called to the requirements of this section as to the certificate of naturalization requiring these facts——

Mr. BONYNGE. The clerk issues the certificate, and he had printed forms and used the old forms.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MARTIN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Suppose a foreigner comes to the State of South Dakota and takes up a homestead; he has to be naturalized before he can prove up, and his naturalization is defective on account of this certificate.

Mr. MARTIN. He does not have to be naturalized to prove up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend my request by adding, on line 10, page 1 of the bill, after the word "section," the words "so far as rights in real property are concerned."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to amend the bill.

Mr. BONYNGE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object, I want to learn what the request is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the right to object, the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Kentucky desire information.

Mr. BONYNGE. Do I understand the purpose of the gentleman from New York is to simply validate certificates in which the other provisions of the section have been complied with and the only failure was to insert in the certificate the fact that the provisions of the statute are complied with?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; and then only so far as they relate to the rights in real property.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman from New York handed me a suggestion, in which he had scratched out the words "which were otherwise lawfully issued." The request the gentleman now makes does not strike out those words.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It does not.

Mr. BONYNGE. Then I do not object.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from New York asks permission to amend his request?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I intended to say "amend the bill."

Mr. SHERLEY. Very well. I did not know but that some previous request had been made of which I was not aware. The gentleman desires now to amend the bill to relate to real estate only?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall not object.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if his contention is that validating the certificates of naturalization can affect title to real property in the States? I do not think it can myself. That is a matter of legislation which is entirely within the control of the States.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; it can pass a law affecting a man's naturalization, upon which his title to the land depends.

Mr. MUDD. But you can not pass a law here affecting the right to acquire or to hold or in any manner to regulate titles to real estate in the States.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is true.

Mr. MUDD. You can validate the act of naturalization upon which the State law in relation to real estate titles will take effect automatically and accomplish what is desired in relation thereto, but you can not here by an act of Congress make a partial provision as to naturalization which goes merely to the point of the acquisition or alienation of land.

Mr. BENNET of New York. My motion is to amend the bill by inserting after the word "section," in line 10, the words "so far as rights in real property are concerned."

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think that will accomplish what the gentleman from New York seeks to accomplish.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. As I understand, if this should be adopted it will not affect anybody except those who own real estate.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman is correct. Where men have gone on under the assumption that they were citizens and were not citizens, but aliens, and either they or their heirs or their devisees have taken title, which title is absolutely invalid, then this act legalizes that certificate of naturalization for that purpose.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. As affecting the real estate in the States, can we pass a retroactive law to make a man a citizen who is an alien?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You can relieve the objection of illegal naturalization, so far as that operates.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. I am opposed to this bill. I think it is improper in form and something much better could be framed to accomplish the object. If the record of the court naturalizing the alien shows that all the proceedings were regular, why not provide for the issuance of a transcript; then that would obviate the alien, or the parties who now have the defective certificate, carrying around over the country a paper which does not show whether it is valid or invalid.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The trouble with the suggestion of the gentleman in this, that people get naturalized, for instance, in the courts of Pittsburg, and then move to Oklahoma or Minnesota and other States. Their certificates are burned and destroyed, and you can not obtain again the original certificates.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. The law provides that we can get a transcript at any time from every court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection made to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, if this bill contemplated to validate certificates of naturalization fraudulently issued, I should certainly vote against it, but as I understand the language of this act, it does no such thing. It merely validates certain certificates of naturalization which are not correct in form, and not because of any fault on the part of the immigrant who sought naturalization, but because of the neglect or oversight of the courts who issued the certificates. Now, the question is, Shall we punish an innocent applicant for a certificate of naturalization whose certificate, in the light of this section in the immigration bill, is now invalid, or shall we state that because of a neglect of the courts these certificates shall be validated?

Mr. BONYNGE. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, people who are concerned in fraudulent certificates of naturalization are being prosecuted to-day in all the large cities of the country. In my own city we have sent quite a number of prominent politicians to the penitentiary for fraudulently procuring naturalization papers for people. But this bill does not apply to that class. It applies to a class of innocent men.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three minutes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that it applies to a class of innocent men who were seeking the boon of citizenship of this country, who have come here with the intention of remaining in this country, who have come here with their families, who have come with the purpose of identifying themselves with the institutions of this country. When we investigate as to which party is benefiting most by the process of naturalization, I would say that, in my own humble judgment, both parties are benefited. The country is benefited by granting citizenship to a good man and a good family, and the immigrant is benefited, upon whom is bestowed that boon of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] speaks. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that this bill will pass, and I am glad that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has been objected to, because it would certainly have weakened the bill. It would have included only those who hold property and all the other thousands would hold defective certificates of naturalization, would be excluded from the benefits of this legislation although the issuing of those defective certificates was no fault of theirs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEPBURN) there were—ayes 51, noes 41.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules was rejected.

PAY OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 203, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1906, on the 20th day of said month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution 203. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21200) to authorize the county of Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the Allegheny River, in Allegheny County, Pa., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, its successors and assigns, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Allegheny River, from a point at or near H street in the borough of Oakmont, Allegheny County, Pa., to Hulton Ferry, in the township of Harmar, in said county and State, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask whether it is intended that that bridge shall be used for railroad purposes?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, the bill is in conformity with the general bridge act which we passed at the last Congress and provides for the use of the bridge by all sorts of corporations. It is the ordinary general-corporation act.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In other words, this is really a bill for the purpose of permitting some railroad company to use this franchise.

Mr. DALZELL. Not so far as I know; no.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What railroad is intending to pass over this bridge?

Mr. DALZELL. No railroad, so far as I know. It is a bridge between two large communities, one on one side of the Allegheny River and the other on the other side, and there is no bridge across within a distance of 8 or 10 miles. It is an ordinary highway bridge built by the county of Allegheny; not a corporation, but a municipality.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would also state it connects Mr. DALZELL's district with mine, and the people all want it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If you two gentlemen desire to get so close together, I shall have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TOMBIGBEE RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 21951, and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21951) to authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Bigbee River, in the State of Alabama.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Bigbee River at or near Stones Ferry, in Pickens County, in the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendment is as follows:

In line 7 strike out "Bigbee" and insert "Tombigbee."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know the name of the railroad corporation which desires to make use of this bridge.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is an ordinary bridge bill in the usual form prescribed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The question I put was, "What corporation desires to make use of this bridge?"

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly it is intended to make use of it; that is why it is to be put up.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to know the name of the railroad that is to pass over it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is in the bill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It is named in the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows:

To authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River in the State of Alabama.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, ISLES OF SHOALS, PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 189) to establish a life-saving station at the Isles of Shoals, off Portsmouth, N. H.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a life-saving station at such point on the Isles of Shoals, off Portsmouth, N. H., as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill, and pending that, if the gentleman from Texas is here, let us see what arrangement can be made for general debate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have not had any application for time except from one gentleman.

Mr. SHERMAN. And he is not here? What do you say, not to exceed an hour?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not to exceed one hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that general debate may be for one hour, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22580, the Indian appropriation bill, Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill as now presented presents no new feature of administration. It does present certain features of legislation which if any gentleman desires to invoke the rule will necessitate the striking out of the provisions. For instance, it has been the custom for many years to make certain provisions as to the manner in which certain funds should be expended; how they could be changed from expenditure in one location or one avenue to another, and also how certain provisions as to the manner of advertising for bids for supplies and the letting of supplies, etc. These provisions have been carried in the bill ever since I first became connected with the Indian Committee, which is twelve years ago, and I do not know how long prior to that time, and we have in the bill this year made those provisions continuous, so that it will be unnecessary year after year to lumber up this appropriation bill with page after page of these provisions. It will be entirely proper for Congress at any time that it desires to do it to make a change of these provisions. It is apparent from the repeated enactment year after year that this is the will of Congress, and we attempt to shorten the bill by making these provisions continuous.

The policy of the Government in the treatment of the Indians is, as has been the policy for many years, to allot to the Indians as rapidly as possible, and to do away as rapidly as possible with the tribal occupancy of the land, to educate the Indians, to instill habits of industry into them, to enforce labor where it is necessary. Where the treaty provisions are such that the administrative officer can require them to labor for money, rather than issue rations to the Indians, to buy the food, that has been done, and that policy is continued now. And we are educating them not merely in the "three R's," not merely in the day schools, but also in the boarding schools and in the manual training schools, teaching them to be artisans, to be carpenters, blacksmiths, harness makers, and the like of that, and more than that, we are teaching the Indians, not merely the youthful ones, but the older and the middle-aged men and women, in their home, the art of farming, of grazing, of cattle raising, housekeeping, of sewing, and of washing, through the instrumentality of the practical farmers and the matrons who go from reservation to reservation and from home to home. This has been the policy for some years, and this is the policy now. In that way it is believed we will soonest reach the goal which all desire, of making the Indians self-supporting citizens.

As viewed from year to year, no striking advance can be seen in the condition of the Indians, but taking any given period of three or five or ten years, or longer, there is to be seen a very rapid improvement in their general condition. Last year in presenting the bill I read from the report in many States and Territories, from agents, from superintendents, from farmers, and the like, showing the satisfactory condition of the Indians as a whole in these various localities. The reports did not all demonstrate improvement and a satisfactory condition, to be sure, but most of them did, and the one wail that then was general, and that I find in the reports for this year as well, is the introduction of alcoholic liquors among the Indians. That is an evil which has been most instrumental in retarding the progress of the Indians heretofore, and it still exists to a degree, stimulated somewhat by a recent decision of the Supreme Court in reference to the right of Indians after taking allotments and becoming citizens. We attempted in last year's bill, and have repeated in this year's bill, to provide for combating that evil by giving to the Commissioner a very considerable sum of money, $25,000, for reaching without the reservation limits in fighting the introduction of liquor to Indians. Perhaps I can best show the advance of the Indians during a period of a decade or more by quoting a few figures, and I shall not quote a great many. First, the population of the Indians to-day, as shown by the last census and somewhat by agency reports since, and a little bit estimated, outside of the Indian Territory, is 192,442; the population within the Territory, 91,637, making a total Indian population of 284,079. Last year the Indian births exceeded the deaths by 316. There are more Indians in Arizona than are in any other State or Territory. There are 38,000 in Arizona, 19,000 in South Dakota, 18,000 in New Mexico, 15,000 in California, and 9,000 in North Dakota. The total fund which belongs to the Indians, held in trust by the Government for them, is $35,000,000—I give these sums in round figures, as there is no use of particularizing to the dollar and cent—upon which the Government paid last year to the Indians $1,721,000 in interest. To this the Indians added by the payment for their own labor throughout the United States last year $1,331,000. Besides this, the United States is obligated, under its various treaties, to pay to Indians, in round numbers, about three-quarters of a million dollars in various ways—some of it in money, some of it in support of schools, some of it in furnishing rations, and so forth.

The total acreage of lands owned by the Indians, both allotted and not allotted, in the United States, outside of the Indian Territory, is 51,000,000 acres, or an average of 271 acres for every man, woman, and child of the Indian population in this country outside of the Territory.

First, let me say, they cultivated themselves 365,000 acres of land, and from them they produced last year three-fourths of a million of bushels of wheat, a million and a quarter of oats and barley, a million bushels of corn, nearly three-quarters of a million of bushels of vegetables, and half a million tons of hay.

Now, to illustrate the advance of the Indians, let me quote these figures: Fifteen years ago there were 75,000 Indians wearing citizens' dress; ten years ago, 81,000, and the last fiscal year for which we have a full report, 116,000. Ten years ago those who wore citizens' clothing, in part, were 31,000; last year, 43,000. Those who could read the English language fifteen years ago were 27,000; ten years ago, 33,000; last year, 63,000. Those who could speak the English language fifteen years ago, 31,000; ten years ago, 41,000, and at the present time upward of 70,000, the last report showing 70,000. The number of dwellings occupied by the Indians fifteen years ago were 20,000; ten years ago, 23,000; now, 28,000. The number of church buildings fifteen years ago, 198; ten years ago, 371, and now, 390. Church membership has increased during the last ten years from 20,000 to 38,000. So that, as I say, these figures show a reasonably satisfactory progress on the part of the Indians throughout the United States. The school enrollment for the last fiscal year has not increased over the school enrollment of the prior year. The average attendance during the last year is slightly greater than the year before. However, with an enrollment of over 30,000 out of a population of 200,000, it seems to me that we have somewhere near reached the high-water mark in school attendance. The reports from the various school superintendents show a satisfactory condition in reference to the education of the pupils in the various schools and from the various reservations. We have about 300 Indian schools—28 large nonreservation boarding schools, the largest of which is Carlisle, the next Chilocco, and the next Haskell, Kans. Over a thousand pupils are educated at Carlisle. At some of the larger schools the so-called "outing system" is in operation, the results of which are uniformly satisfactory. The Indians during the vacation are farmed out, and farmed out with very great care, to families where they are taught the art of housekeeping and farming and the like from a practical standpoint.

There has been much agitation both in and out of Congress in reference to so-called "contract schools." Congress about ten years ago declared that after a specified time named in the act Congress should no longer appropriate to these contract schools—"sectarian schools," as they were then called. Since 1901 Congress has not so appropriated, but under the direction of the Executive certain treaty funds and certain trust funds have been used for the support of some of these schools. Under a ruling that has been made the treaty funds are no longer used for that purpose. Trust funds are used where the tribes petition that they be so used. At the present time there are contracts with less than half a dozen schools, in which there are educated less than 300 children under these contracts. But there are so-called "sectarian schools" still maintained by various denominations—more by the Catholic Church than by any other denomination—schools in which about 3,500 Indian scholars are educated and supported or maintained by the Catholic Church, Presbyterian Church, Lutherans, Episcopalians, Dutch Reformed, Methodists, and possibly other denominations. The fact is that they do this with money that they raise in their own way, with which Congress has naught to do. Of these schools, I think there are forty-five, and the Catholic Church supports, if I remember correctly, twenty-nine, and the other sixteen are supported by the various other denominations. The care and maintenance of the pupils in these schools is satisfactory.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with this I hope not too lengthy explanation I reserve the balance of my time. When we come to the reading of the bill, I will be glad to explain any item that any Member of the House desires to have information upon.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Before the gentleman sits down——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, just one moment. I neglected to take up the report. It discloses these facts: That, first, the total amount that is proposed to be appropriated is $8,200,000. Last year the total amount was $9,400,000. Now, it is proposed to appropriate a sum in excess of the estimates by the Department. We have provided for $300,000 rather than $150,000 estimated for the support of schools in the Indian Territory, and this money is expended not merely for the education of the Indians, but for whites as well, during the transition period from the condition of tribal ownership to coming in under the State government.

These schools, by the way, are contributed to not merely by this appropriation, but also by certain funds that come to the tribe for royalties on certain lands which have been leased, and also from fees for certain court proceedings. So that while the facts are that last year more white people were educated in these schools than Indians, $150,000 was appropriated by Congress, and the balance of better than $400,000 was expended out of the Indian fund. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman referred to a ruling by the Department in relation to treaty funds. Would he be kind enough to state just exactly what the ruling was, so that we can get an idea of the situation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The idea was that the trust funds could be used for the education of the Indian children in any schools that the owners of the fund desired them to be educated in; wherever the Indians of any tribe petition that a portion of their fund should be used for the education of their children in any particular school that it should be so used.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the tribe had to take the initiative?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; by petition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The trust funds are being so used, but the treaty funds are not.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The trust funds are being used for the benefit of the cestui que trusts?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes. The treaty funds are not used in this way, but when the Indians petition that the trust funds be used in any particular way for educational purposes they are so used.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has there been any ruling in relation to the use of the treaty funds?

Mr. SHERMAN. The ruling has been that they could not be so used.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Could not be used on the petition of the tribe?

Mr. SHERMAN. No. The Department has declined so to use the treaty funds.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Under what circumstances was that ruling made?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is some action pending in some court, on the application of somebody somewhere, representing one of these schools, for a determination of that question. I have forgotten whether it be in the nature of a mandamus proceeding or an injunction proceeding, but I say there is now pending a proceeding to determine whether or not the Department shall use the treaty funds upon the application of the Indian tribes. Pending the determination of that action, the funds are not being so used.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The bill last year from your committee, appropriating for the Indians, as I remember it, carried quite a large increase in salaries and in the number of officers, something in excess of $100,000. Is the gentleman able to state what the fact is in relation to the present bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is in error in his recollection of last year's bill. It did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My recollection is that it provided for a large number of extra officers.

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I thought it did.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman's recollection is at fault.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the fact about this bill so far as the creation of new offices is concerned and the increase of official salaries?

Mr. SHERMAN. We create no new offices. I am glad the gentleman made the inquiry, because it brings to my mind one subject I have not discussed. We have heretofore appropriated specifically for the superintendents of the various schools. We make this change in this bill: We divide the schools into four classes. Class 1 is made up of boarding schools that have 100 students or less; class 2, those having from 100 to 200; class 3, above 200 and below 400; class 4, above 400; and we provide that the salaries of superintendents in class 1 shall be not exceeding $1,200; in class 2, not exceeding $1,600; in class 3, not to exceed $2,000, and in class 4, not to exceed $2,500.

These salaries are to be fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The idea was this: Now the superintendent is put at a school, say, with a salary of $1,200. No matter how efficient he may be, that is all he can get in that school, and the only way to give him promotion is to take him to some other school. The Commissioner believed, and the committee thought he was correct in his idea, that to provide this sliding scale, as it were, the Commissioner could bring a new man into the service, put him at a school in class 2, pay him in that school a salary of $1,300 or $1,400, and say: "Now, when you have brought this school up to a higher grade than it now is, when you accomplish a little more than has heretofore been accomplished, I will raise your salary to the maximum of $1,600." In other words, he believed that stimulant before the superintendent will result in the betterment of the service, and the committee thought he was right in that regard.

It does not increase the number of superintendents, but it increases slightly the appropriation, because there are a few schools, two or three, where the number of students is above 400, and the salary now appropriated is less than $2,500. But it does not of necessity follow that the Commissioner will fix the salary at $2,500. For instance, take the Riverside School, California, where there is as efficient and capable and fine a superintendent as in any school in the country, regardless of color of the students, and the salary is $2,250, and as far as I know the superintendent is entirely satisfied. I imagine the Commissioner will not think it necessary to raise that salary above the $2,250, which it is at present. But the maximum is $2,500, and we appropriate the maximum, so that if the Commissioner sees fit to use it he can. But that means all told only twelve or fifteen hundred dollars.

The gentleman from Maine must understand that in this bill we do not appropriate for the officers here in the city of Washington, only the officers in the field. We never do appropriate for the administration in the office at Washington—that is carried in the legislative bill. All this bill cares for is the administration in the field and the obligations of the Government by way of treaty and gratuities.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Are there any increases appropriated for in the bill other than those which the gentleman has described?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not remember now whether we appropriate more for the Indian Territory work than we did last year, but unless we do there is no other increase.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That would be in connection with the increased appropriation for schools in the Indian Territory?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; my recollection is that we appropriate less for the work in the Indian Territory this year than we did last year, except school work that I spoke of. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is to be congratulated for the reduction in expenditures in this bill from that of last session. The amount appropriated for 1907 was $9,405,198, and the amount carried in this bill is $8,203,068, making an excess of last year over this year of $1,202,131.

I desire further to state, Mr. Chairman, that there is but little new legislation in this bill. Among the items of new legislation I find this, an item which capitalizes the fund of the Iowa Sac and Fox tribe of Oklahoma, and enables the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of money to their credit on his books, and on which the Government is now paying interest.

Mr. CURTIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but these are Kansas Indians and not Oklahoma Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand; but it is merely a provision that enables the money to be paid out according to the indorsement of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad if the gentleman will explain this process of capitalization.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Where a fund has come to the Indians under different treaty stipulations, capitalizing it is putting it all together and paying it off in bulk to the Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They get all the money due them, but it is capitalized and paid to them under their instructions, so as to save so much trouble and bookkeeping. It is simply a matter of bookkeeping.

There will be found in the bill a raise of from $150,000 to $300,000 which was appropriated last year for schools in the Indian Territory. We find that the amount we appropriated last year was wholly insufficient for the purpose of carrying on the schools in the country. This is outside of the towns. So we simply doubled it this year and let it carry $300,000.

I disagree with the chairman of the committee and with the majority of the committee, and have for some years, with reference to the use of trust and treaty funds for sectarian schools. I have bills pending to correct that trouble, as I so regard it, but have been unable to get the Committee on Indian Affairs to see these things in the light that I see them. I think all of these trust funds and the treaty funds coming to the Indians should be used in Indian Government schools, and that no part of it should be farmed out to any sectarian school of any kind or character. I believe that the principle is wrong. Another matter to which I desire to call the attention of the House is this: We find a great many Indians who have become citizens of the United States under a recent decision—I believe the Hough case—where an Indian in Kansas had some one sell him whisky. The man who sold the Indian the whisky was prosecuted. He defended on the ground that the Indian was a citizen of the United States, because his land had been allotted to him. He was convicted in the lower court. The case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and they reversed the lower court and held that after allotment of lands to Indians they become citizens of the United States, and hence it was no offense to sell whisky to a citizen of the United States. I believe it is wrong for Congress and the United States to have to educate children of the citizens of the United States, and I take the broad ground that when these Indians have their lands allotted to them that they do become citizens of the United States and that they should be taken off the General Government and that the States and Territories where they live should provide for educating them; that they should be mixed among the children of the schools of the State or Territory and become part and parcel of the schools of the State or Territory where they reside. I do not think it is fair for the entire United States to be taxed; for the Government of the United States to go into the various States and Territories where these Indian reservations happen to be and appropriate $167 per capita to each one of these Indians for the purpose of educating what are now citizens of the United States simply because they may have one-sixteenth or one-eighth of Indian blood in their veins.

If we adopt this policy when these allotments are made and these people become citizens of the United States, and turn them over to the States or Territories, then we will have this Indian problem solved in a very few years, because we have very justly adopted the policy of allotting the lands to the Indians and making them citizens, and we should let them become a part and parcel of the great body of our citizens. Then the local legislatures of the States or Territories should take control of them, and that would relieve the Congress of the United States from the burden. It would relieve the Treasury of the United States from the burden, and in that way the Indian problem would soon be solved.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], stated that there were forty-five sectarian schools in the Territory, twenty-nine of which were Catholic and the others Protestant. Do all of these sectarian schools there share in this trust fund that the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; that is done in this way. It is done on petition of the tribe, as I understand it, to the Secretary of the Interior to be permitted to use so much of their fund as is available for that year; and they select the school, whether Catholic, Presbyterian, or whatever it may be, to which they desire to send their children. I object to that, for the reason that you will have a petition going the rounds for one kind of school and another for another; as, for instance, for a Presbyterian and for a Catholic school; and you thus have a sectarian trouble among those Indians. I maintain that all of these funds should be used only in Government schools, under the control of the Government, and not under the control of any sectarian teacher whatever.

Mr. WEBB. Is there any one of the churches that receives the largest share of this trust fund?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the Catholic Church, as the chairman has stated, has twenty-nine out of forty-five.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield such time as I may have left to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration for Indian appropriations is absolutely safe in the hands of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and especially as the chairman [Mr. SHERMAN] has the full confidence of every Member of this body. Indeed it would be safe, in my judgment, to adopt the recommendations and approve the bill as a whole without discussion or change of any character. [Applause.]

Therefore I shall devote the period allotted me to the necessity of larger appropriations for the improvement of the nation's waterways, the best and cheapest manner of handling the country's products.

These are nature's common carriers and will solve the vexed problem of transportation and railroad-rate regulation.

A great congress of commercial bodies, representing every section of the country, with an attendance of 1,000 delegates, met in this city December 7 and 8, 1906, to discuss ways and means to bring about the desired results. Speeches were made by distinguished men known for their civic pride and sterling patriotism, resolutions unanimously adopted demanding at lease $50,000,000 annually for river and harbor improvements, and a permanent organization effected, with that zealous and untiring colleague of ours, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], at its head as president.

The country should awaken from its apathy and get behind this grand and praisworthy organization, creating and stimulating a strong active public sentiment in favor of the project advocated. In this way the Congress of the United States, ever responsive to public sentiment, will see to it that a sufficient amount of the annual revenues of the Government is appropriated for this purpose, and that, too, before the moneys are devoted to other and less important objects.

While in favor of a good navy and a well-equipped, limited-in-number army, I do not advocate excessive and yearly increasing appropriations for these objects, and especially not at the expense of the improvement of the great waterways of the country now actually needed to transport the rich products of the farm, the mine, the forest, and the factory.

Representing a district with forty-odd miles of navigable water front and a population of 400,000, I am particularly interested in this matter. This district has such well-known waterways as the Hudson, East, Bronx, and Harlem rivers, Long Island Sound, Westchester and Eastchester creeks, and Bronx Kills, all tidal streams, with an immense traffic; all under improvement by the General Government except the Kills.

What is demanded by my people and those of the Empire State is that the improvements now under way be speedily completed, and not drag along another quarter or half a century in most of the improvements, as has been the case. Take the Harlem River, 8 miles in length and with a commerce the last year of 9,998,021 tons, valued at $270,210,309, and a contiguous population to be benefited of 850,000. It has been under way since 1874, nearly thirty-three years. The Borough of the Bronx, the upper part of the Eighteenth Congressional district, which I have the honor to represent, one of the five great subdivisions of New York City, has a population of over 300,000, an assessed valuation January, 1906, one year ago, of $360,543,727. Its growth is phenomenal, increasing at the rate of 35,000 yearly, due to its great natural advantages. The new buildings erected in 1906 will approximate $40,000,000 in value, mostly homes for the great middle class of our people, who are coming into the borough. New docks are being built and many more in contemplation, eventually making these waterways one solid line of wharfs and storehouses, thus giving relief to the congested state of affairs in the lower part of the city, now the center of great commercial activity. [Applause.]

When it is remembered that more than one-half of the foreign and coastwise trade enters or leaves the port of New York the importance of these waterways will be appreciated.

In addition to all this there will be a largely increased traffic from the Lakes and the great Northwest when the canal system of the State of New York, upon which $101,000,000 is now being expended, is completed, which will be an accomplished fact in the next decade.

I desire to add as a part of my remarks the very able and interesting report made to the Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, chairman of Rivers and Harbors Committee, under date of December 15, 1906, by the Hon. James L. Wells, of the North Side Board of Trade, an organization of nearly 500 prominent business men in the Borough of the Bronx. Mr. Wells was for six years the president of this influential body of distinguished citizens and is an acknowledged authority on real estate, taxes, and assessments and the charter of Greater New York, having been one of its framers. [Applause.]

Now, with a growing sentiment all over this land of ours that the railroads are no longer able to carry the products of the country, no longer able to give relief in the way of fuel, as I have observed in the morning papers, in the West, where cities are suffering to-day from the severe cold, because of the inability of the railroads to carry the fuel necessary for those places; inasmuch as so distinguished a gentleman as James J. Hill, president of the Northern Railroad Company, in a recent letter stated that the improvement of our waterways was an absolute necessity if we desired to have the products of the country carried to the markets; if this is the case, and I think it is, the railroads being no longer able to perform the duties for which they were chartered and built, it is time, I should think, my colleagues, to do something to improve and complete the various waterway projects under way in order that these natural channels of commerce and trade may be able to come to the rescue of the railroads, especially in the matter of heavy freight, and be enabled to give what is necessary for the prosperity and comfort of its people. Not only that, but by the river and ocean methods we are enabled to carry freight, particularly heavy freight, so much cheaper—I think about eight times less than it can be done by railroads. Therefore I trust that the recent congress which met here in convention will have a salutary effect upon this body, so that larger sums may be appropriated for the improvement of our rivers and harbors under the direction of that able committee, a committee that has never been charged with any wrongdoing nor lack of interest in the matter, a committee that has given the best of their time and their ability to bring out bills which were for the benefit of the whole country. I trust, therefore, that this Congress will pass a bill during this session that will give the needed relief to the whole nation in the way of larger appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. [Applause.]

Statement submitted by James L. Wells, representing the North Side Board of Trade of the city of New York, in favor of an appropriation for the completion of the Harlem Ship Canal.

Mr. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN: The North Side Board of Trade of the city of New York has requested me to respectfully submit for your consideration the following statements in favor of an appropriation for the completion of the Harlem Ship Canal.

1. THE ADVISABILITY OF THE WORK.

The nature of the improvement.—This improvement consists in widening and deepening the channel of the Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, in the city of New York, so as to make a continuous ship canal connecting the waters of the Hudson River with those of Long Island Sound.

This is not a new, local, or expensive proposition.—It is one of the oldest and most meritorious projects of its kind in the United States.

Always navigable streams.—Ever since their discovery by the Dutch the Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek have been regarded as navigable streams. In colonial times and long afterwards they furnished the natural waterway for the farmers of Manhattan and the great territory beyond to transport their products and supplies to and from the city of New York. During our war for independence they were constantly used by the contending armies for the transportation of troops, munitions, and provisions to the numerous forts along their banks.

The available depth of the water in these streams before their improvement by the United States begun was from 8 to 10 feet.

Part of the canal system of New York.—The improvement of these waterways formed an essential part of the original plan of Gouverneur Morris for connecting Lake Erie with the ocean. Governor De Witt Clinton, of New York, gave this project his hearty approval. He formulated the necessary legislation for its accomplishment by the State of New York, and would have secured its enactment had it not been for his untimely death.

An arm of the sea.—In 1837 the learned Chancellor Walworth judicially decided that "the Harlem River is a public highway and an arm of the sea." (Renwick v. Morris, 7 Hill, 575.) Vice-Chancellor McGoun in 1839 also decided in the Matter of the Water Commissioners that "the Harlem River is a navigable stream. The tide ebbs and flows through it. It is an arm of the sea." (3 Edwards Chancery Reports, 289–291.) The legislature of the State of New York also finally deemed it to be unwise to subject these waters to the control of private individuals or corporations desiring to improve their navigation and collect tolls.

Comparative availability.—The coast survey hydrographic charts and other official maps established the fact that the natural navigable capacity of the Harlem River compared favorably with any of the harbors on the Atlantic coast from Eastport, Me., to Jacksonville, Fla. Those competent to judge declared that the lower Harlem was a better stream for commercial purposes than the Seine at Paris. (See report of Hon. Andrew H. Green, New York park commissioner, 1868.) Others positively assert that it compared favorably with the Clyde at Glasgow, the Weser at Bremen, and the Elbe at Hamburg.

The public necessity of improving the Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, and of converting these streams into a ship canal, was determined by the United States authorities in 1874, more than thirty-two years ago.

A great convenience.—In 1874 Congress made a small appropriation for the survey of these streams. In 1875 Col. John Newton, United States engineer, in charge of the work, in his report to General Humphreys, Chief Engineer, United States Army, recommending the improvement, said "it would, if made, constitute a great convenience for vessels passing through the Harlem to Long Island Sound." He also said in his report, "it must be the depot for vast supplies of lumber, stone, brick, cement, lath, lime, and other building materials."

Official investigations.—Congressional committees, as well as the engineers of the War Department, have frequently examined and reported in favor of the improvement.

A part of New York's harbor.—The Board of Engineers, on December 7, 1892, answering certain questions submitted to them in reference to the improvement, said: "The Harlem River, in its natural and present condition, is a large and important part of New York's harbor, and offers location for wharves, manufactures, and shipyards superior to any unoccupied water fronts on Manhattan Island. The rapidly increasing demands of commerce and navigation preclude the notion that anything should be done to diminish the harbor accommodations." (See report of General Schofield, United States Army, to Senate Committee on Commerce.

Benefits resulting from the work.—Secretaries of War have from time to time officially reported to Congress that the work already done has made a reduction in freight rates, increased the facilities for handling shipments, caused a material saving in the time and cost of transportation, and that the completion of the work would constitute a great convenience to vessels passing through the canal to Long Island Sound.

Indorsements and petitions.—The advisability of this improvement has been indorsed by the legislature of the State of New York, by the legislative department of the city of New York, by chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and other organizations, and by thousands of prominent business men in all the large cities between the Atlantic coast and the Mississippi River. The petitions are matters of official record.

Further discussion unnecessary.—The time has long since elapsed for a further discussion of the advisability of this important project. The General Government is already committed to the prosecution of the work to completion by the large sums of money it has already expended upon it and the heavy expenses it has imposed upon the city of New York.

If this improvement was advisable in 1874 and 1886, when authorized by the Government, it certainly is much more so now, with the extraordinary growth of the city, State, and nation in population, wealth, commerce, and manufacturing enterprises.

The growth of city shows its necessity.—The phenomenal growth of New York City north of Ninety-eighth street shows the necessity of this improvement. This growth alone would justify the most liberal expenditures by the General Government in order to facilitate commerce by the completion of the work.

In 1874, when Colonel Newton's plans were adopted by the War Department, the portion of Manhattan on the southerly and westerly side of the Harlem River was comparatively sparsely settled, and the assessed value of its real estate was only about $70,000,000. Now its population is over 500,000, and the assessed value of its real estate is over $700,000,000.

In 1874 the population of that part of the city of New York north and east of the Harlem River, now called "the Borough of the Bronx," was about 36,000, and the assessed value of its real estate was about $22,000,000. Now upward of 350,000 people have their homes and their business interests in the Bronx, and the assessed value of its taxable real estate was, in January, 1906, $360,543,727.

Since January 1, 1881, the estimated cost of new buildings erected in the Bronx has been approximately $229,000,000. The cost of those erected during the past three years has been approximately $90,000,000.

These figures show a total population on both sides of the Harlem River of over 850,000. This is a population greater than that of any one of sixteen States of the Union and greater than that of five of them combined. This is a population greater than that of the whole State of New York when the Erie Canal was first suggested.

These figures also show that the taxable value of real estate alone contiguous to the Harlem River is greater than the total combined taxable value of all the real and personal property in any one of thirty-four States of the Union and greater than that of eleven of our States together.

A growth so extraordinary as this in itself creates commerce, and the Harlem River, situated, as it is, in the center of this great population, is the natural carrier and its docks the storage and distributing depot for the bulky merchandise of this large and enterprising community.

Why the improvement is advisable.—We hold that the completion of this improvement is advisable for the following, among other, reasons:

1. It is in the interests of commerce, present and prospective, of the whole country, and especially of the Atlantic coast and the Great Lakes.
2. The United States Government is pledged to finish the work expeditiously, and as a condition precedent thereto has required the city of New York to comply with its terms and to expend large sums of money in furtherance of the project.
3. It will afford a new, shorter, and safer route for State and interstate commerce.
4. It will reduce the cost of transportation and save thousands of dollars annually in time and money.
5. It will enlarge the capacity of the harbor of New York by adding to it 8 miles of available water front.
6. It will assist in relieving the congestion of the docks in the lower part of the city of New York.
7. It has already and will continue to cause large transfer freight stations and new commercial and manufacturing interests to locate on either side of the improved ship canal.

2. THE PRACTICABILITY AND PROGRESS OF THE WORK.

The geographical position of the Harlem River demonstrates the practicability as well as the advisability of converting that stream and its natural extensions, Spuyten Duyvil Creek and Bronx Kills into a ship canal.

No great engineering difficulties are connected with the project.

The plans for the project.—The original project was adopted by the War Department in 1874. The existing project was adopted June 18, 1878, and modified and enlarged October 7, 1886. These final plans provide for a continuous channel about 7 miles long, 400 feet wide, and 15 feet deep at mean low water, from the East River to the Hudson River, except about 1,300 feet north of High Bridge, where the width was made 354 feet, and the rock cut through Dyckmans Meadow, where the width was reduced to 350 feet and the depth increased to 18 feet. (See Annual Report of Chief of Engineers, 1906, Appendix E, p. 129.)

Progress of the work.—Actual work under the existing plan on the improvement began in January, 1888, and has progressed slowly since that time. The work has been confined to the Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek. No actual work has yet been done on the Bronx Kills.

What has been accomplished.—The most expensive part of the work, namely, the rock cut through Dyckmans Meadow, has been completed. The engineer in charge, in his report for 1906, says work has resulted "in completing a channel 150 to 400 feet wide and 15 feet deep at mean low water from the Hudson River to the East River. From McComb's Dam Bridge to the East River the width varies from 150 to 400 feet wide." (See Annual Report of Chief of Engineers, 1906, Appendix E, p. 129.)

3. ESTIMATED COST OF PROJECT, AMOUNTS HERETOFORE APPROPRIATED, AMOUNTS ALREADY EXPENDED, AMOUNT NECESSARY TO COMPLETE THE IMPROVEMENT.

The estimated cost of the work for the improvement of the Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek is $2,700,000. (See Annual Report of Chief of Engineers, 1906, Appendix E, p. 129.)

Amounts appropriated.—The appropriation for the improvement of the Harlem River have been made in inadequate installments, averaging about $40,000 per year, as follows:

1878	300,000
1879	100,000
1888	70,000
1890	250,000
1892	175,000
1894	125,000
1896	125,000
1899	100,000
1902	75,000
1905	75,000
Total	1,416,000

(See Report of Chief of Engineers, 1906, Appendix E, p. 956.)

The amount expended on this improvement from 1874 to the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1906, was $1,332,551.91. (See Report of Chief of Engineers, 1906, Appendix E, p. 129.) This has been at the average rate of $41,600 per year.

The amount required to complete the work, according to the report of the Chief of Engineers above mentioned, will be $1,305,000, or less than the one-half of 1 per cent of $270,000,000, the value of the tonnage carried on the Harlem Ship Canal during the year 1905. If appropriations in the future be made at the same average annual amounts as in the past, it will require thirty-one years longer to complete the improvement.

The cost of maintenance.—This con not now be determined, as the improvement is not yet completed. Engineers with whom we have consulted assure us that the cost of maintaining the improvement when finished will be comparatively light.

4. THE CHARACTER, AMOUNT, AND VALUE OF COMMERCE EXISTING OR REASONABLY PROSPECTIVE WHICH WILL BE BENEFITED BY THE COMPLETION OF THE HARLEM SHIP CANAL.

The character of the commerce on the Harlem is shown by the class of vessels using the river and by the great manufacturing establishments, the numerous railroad freight stations, large lumber, brick, coal, and other businesses established in or contiguous to the stream.

Vessels employed in trade on the Harlem, 1905.

Class.	Trips made.	Tonnage.	Draft.
			Feet.
Steamboats	33,882	50 to 541	8 to 15
Sailing vessels	850	90 to 1,000	5 to 22
Barges, canal boats, and lighters	26,051	90 to 700	4 to 30

The following statistics compiled from reports of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department show the character of commerce on the Harlem River during the years 1904 and 1905:

	Tonnage, 1904.	Tonnage, 1905.
Ashes, etc	263,495	278,419
Building stone	160,264	136,963
Brick	880,908	310,645
Cement, lime, and sand	193,556	471,600
Coal and other fuel	2,516,288	3,103,738
Fertilizers	14,328
Fruit and farm products	3,103	5,102
Grain, flour, and feed	377,142	544,134
Hay and straw	72,858	20,836
Ice	172,493	200,402
Iron	25,085	63,198
Lumber and timber	127,216	304,634
Merchandise, general	4,264,077	4,506,500
Petroleum		51,850
Total tonnage	9,130,763	9,998,021

The amount of commerce existing.—The commerce of the Harlem River, which is steadily increasing, is so intimately connected with that belonging to the East River and New York Harbor that a separate statement can not be accurately made. Investigations instituted by the North Side Board of Trade show that the amount is much larger than that stated in the Report of the Secretary of War for the year 1905.

The average increase in the amount of freight handled by the larger shippers on the river who have reported to our board was in 1905 36 per cent over that of 1904.

The amount of tonnage and the value of the same carried on the Harlem River are shown in the following table compiled from the reports of the Chief Engineer of the War Department:

Year.	Tonnage.	Value.
1887	2,542,155
1889	3,093,939
1890	2,384,466	$115,506,425
1893	5,910,376	190,149,712
1895	7,533,594	203,707,376
1903	6,910,386	282,186,100
1905	9,998,021	270,210,309

The value of the tonnage carried on the Harlem in 1905 was $270,210,309, an amount as large as the total combined value of all the taxable real and personal property of six of the States of the Union, and as great as that of the total taxable value of real and personal property in any one of seventeen of them.

Such an amount of commerce justifies every dollar spent upon the improvement of the important waterway. The demands for the completion of the work should not be ignored.

Comparison of tonnage values.—The value of tonnage transported upon the Harlem River in 1905 as compared with the total export and import trade of the United States with other countries during the same time is shown by the following table compiled from the Tribune and World Almanacs for the year 1906, said figures being taken from the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor:

Germany	312,637,347
Asia	290,038,894
Harlem River	270,210,309
Mexico and West Indies	250,804,613
France, Spain, Portugal, and Africa	230,977,815
Central America	230,164,294
South America (all countries)	207,661,966
British America	206,672,457
Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark	191,699,916
Switzerland, Italy, Austria, Turkey, and Russia	163,350,622

The congested condition of the river.—The commerce of the river has increased so rapidly and become so immense that navigation below One hundred and forty-ninth Street Bridge has become dangerously congested and accidents involving serious loss, delay, and inconvenience are of frequent occurrence. The numerous foreign and domestic craft now using the canal are also larger in size than formerly, and they require for their accommodation a channel wider than that which now exists.

5. THE AMOUNT OF COMMERCE REASONABLY PROSPECTIVE WHICH WILL BE BENEFITED BY THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE HARLEM RIVER.

At the inception of the work Colonel Newton in speaking of the advantages of the improvement to commerce said in his report of February 18, 1875: "It is simply impossible to foresee the effects, save in a general way; but it seems to me quite as easy to err by assigning too little as too much importance to the subject." (Annual Report of Chief of Engineers, 1875, Appendix Y, p. 39.) In 1890, two years after the actual work of improvement begun, the freight carried on the Harlem amounted to 2,384,466 tons. In 1905 it was 9,998,021 tons, an increase of over 300 per cent in fifteen years. It is reasonable to assume that with the growth of the city of New York the commerce of the Harlem will continue to increase at the same rate in the future. If it does the tonnage at the end of the next fifteen years, or in 1920, will be over 40,000,000 tons, almost equal to the tonnage of the Great Lakes that passed through the famous St. Marys Canal in 1905. The enlargement of the canals of the State of New York for the passage of 1,000 ton barges, the development of the freight transfer stations of the New York Central, New York and New Haven, Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio, Erie, Lehigh Valley, New Jersey Central, and Lackawanna Railroads already located on the banks of the Harlem, the improvement of Bronx Kills and the general increase in the commerce of the country are indications that the above estimate is not exaggerated.

6. THE UNITED STATES PLEDGED TO COMPLETE THE IMPROVEMENT.

We hold that the National Government is bound to complete the improvement of the Harlem River, Spuyten Duyvil Creek, and Bronx Kills without further delay, for the reason that before commencing the work it imposed upon the State and the city of New York expensive terms and conditions with which they have fully complied.

The terms imposed by the United States are contained in the following extracts from official reports:

In Colonel Newton's report to Gen. A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, dated February 18, 1875, he says:

"As it may be necessary, in order to carry out the plan of improvement, to encroach upon lands under water, or structures erected upon what was once the bed of the river, it would seem but just that the authority, whether the State of New York or the city, which has made the grant or concession tending to prevent the feasibility or impair the excellence of the improvement of the river should make reparation to the individuals concerned." (Annual Report of Chief of Engineers for 1875, Appendix Y, p. 42.)

In the same report Colonel Newton also recommended:

"If Congress shall deem it advisable to prosecute this improvement, that the Government absolutely forbid the erection of any more bridges having piers within the waterway of the improved rivers, or not constructed of height sufficient to permit navigation without the use of draws; as to existing bridges, except High Bridge, it is recommended they should be got rid of as speedily as the laws under which they have been erected will permit." (Annual Report of Chief of Engineers for 1875, Appendix Y, p. 48.)

In his official report to General Humphreys dated February 10, 1876, Colonel Newton said:

"I beg leave to reiterate the substance of what was said in the previous report of the necessity, before work is actually begun, of a clear understanding and definite agreement concerning the character of future bridges and of the modification of existing ones, the depth at which all tunnels shall be driven, and the settlement of land damages." (See Report of Chief of Engineers, 1876, Appendix D, p. 19.)

The Secretary of War adopted the recommendations of Colonel Newton, and decided not to proceed with the work of constructing the ship canal until the State and the city of New York erected proper laws for ceding to the United States the lands necessary for widening the streams and the protection of the improved channel.

In an official report dated January 5, 1880, addressed to Gen. H. G. Wright, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Colonel Newton said that should the amount then appropriated and available be devoted to the commencement of the work "the very fact pledges the Government to complete it, because an incompleted improvement would be a positive injury to the whole neighborhood."

In commenting upon this letter General Wright, in his report to the Secretary of War, said: "There is much force in Colonel Newton's statement, and if his wishes can be carried out the work will be accomplished with economy and dispatch and in the best possible way for all interests concerned."

Secretary of War Ramsey, in transmitting this correspondence to the United States Senate, said:

"The Department fully coincides with the views of Colonel Newton, and respectfully requests action in accordance with his recommendations."

By chapter 907, United States laws of 1890, the sum of $250,000 was appropriated for continuing the improvement, and "the Secretary of War is directed to cause the low bridges now crossing said Harlem River to be replaced by other bridges at the expense of the owners thereof as soon as the necessary legislation, if any such legislation be necessary, shall have enabled the change in grade to the approaches to said bridges thus required to be made, the owners of said bridges being allowed a reasonable time in which to complete the work necessary for said approaches. Said bridges shall leave a clear space between the under sides thereof at high water of spring tides of 24 feet and shall be provided with draw spans of the width and length to be determined by the Secretary of War, and shall in all respects comply with this law and conform to the requirements of the Secretary of War."

THE STATE OF NEW YORK HAS COMPLIED WITH THESE CONDITIONS.

It was my privilege to represent the upper part of the city of New York in the legislatures of 1879 and 1880 and to introduce and assist in enacting the measures suggested by Colonel Newton and required by the Congress of the United States for the protection of the improved channel of the Harlem River, Bronx Kills, and Spuyten Duyvil Creek. They constitute chapter 345 of the laws of 1879 and chapter 65 of the laws of 1880. These acts authorize and empower the city of New York to cede to the United States free of cost the lands necessary for the enlarged channel and to acquire by condemnation such private property as was necessary for the widened waterways. They granted to the United States concurrent jurisdiction over the aforesaid streams. They also provided that all bridges built across them should be not less than 24 feet above high-water mark of springtide, that the outlines and the size and height of their draws and other details should first be submitted to and approved by the United States engineers in charge of the harbor of New York and by the Secretary of War. The State has also compelled all railroads crossing the Harlem and its extensions to remove their low bridges or to build new and higher ones or tunnels, and to raise or lower their roadbeds. All of these requirements were imperative in order to comply with the plans of the War Department.

NEW YORK'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO COMMERCE.

In addition to this the State of New York has made the most magnificent contributions to the commercial interests of the nation.

Over three-quarters of a century ago the State of New York, at a cost of $7,143,789, constructed the Erie Canal from the Niagara to the Hudson River. Its enlargement in 1836–1862 cost the State $44,465,414. The State has annually expended large sums for its maintenance and improvement. This artificial waterway, 363 miles in length, has furnished cheap and convenient transportation for the products of the great West to the seaboard as well as for those of our own State. This grand artery of commerce is owned by the people. It is operated by the State. It can not be merged into any pool. Neither can its stock be watered.

Ten years ago the people of the State of New York voted to expend $9,000,000 for the improvement of their canals. Up to and including the appropriations of 1895 the total cost of constructing and improving the Erie, Oswego, and Champlain canals has been about $118,000,000.

On November 3, 1903, 673,010 electors of the State of New York, a majority of over 245,000, voted in favor of the proposition to expend $101,000,000 for the enlargement of these canals, so as to permit the passage of 1,000-ton barges. This work will be commenced during the coming year. It is the most stupendous scheme of internal improvement that has ever been proposed in any commonwealth in this country, and it has few parallels in the history of the world.

The city of New York has complied with the contract. The city of New York has complied fully with the terms of the compact since the United States assumed absolute control of these waterways. It has ceded to the United States without cost the lands of the municipality needed for widening the Harlem. (See deed in comptroller's office, New York City, book B, p. 61.) In order to comply with the conditions imposed upon it the city of New York did loan its credit by the issue of bonds for the purchase of private property needed for the improvement. During the past twenty years the city of New York has expended over $12,500,000 in removing existing bridges and constructing new ones across the Harlem River. The cost of these bridges has been largely increased because of the greater width of draws and the increased height of the structures and the approaches thereto to comply with the requirements of the War Department. During the coming twenty years, or even in less time, the city of New York will be required to expend at least $12,500,000 more in order to complete additional new bridges across the Harlem, the expense of which will also be largely enhanced by the requirements of the United States authorities. The city is now spending $2,500,000 in rebuilding a bridge across the Harlem at Madison avenue and a large sum for a bridge at Fordham Heights. It is estimated that the amount annually raised by the city of New York by taxation to pay the interest on bonds issued by it for the construction of new bridges across the Harlem River built in conformity with the plans of the War Department is nine and one-half times the average annual amount appropriated by Congress since 1874 for the improvement of the Harlem Ship Canal.

What property owners have contributed.—The owners of real estate in the upper part of the city of New York contiguous to the Harlem Ship Canal have also contributed largely to the improvement of that waterway in the amounts paid in greatly increased taxation and local assessments, made necessary for the acquisition of and damages done to private property, for the construction of new bridges, viaducts, and approaches, and the reregulating, regrading, and repaving of existing streets and avenues and the opening of new thoroughfares.

Among other things they have suffered their property to be assessed locally over $1,000,000, namely, $258,892 for acquiring private lands necessary for constructing the Harlem Ship Canal (see report and order confirming same, New York county clerk's office in matter petition of U. U. entered July 9, 1886) and $750,000 for a portion of the cost of reregulating and regrading Park or Fourth avenue above One hundred and sixth street in order to enable the New York Central Railroad to cross the river at the elevation required by the War Department.

These large expenditures by the city of New York and its property owners are entitled to the most serious consideration of the Congress of the United States.

7. THE COMPLETION OF THE HARLEM SHIP CANAL IS A MATTER OF GREAT NATIONAL IMPORTANCE FOR THE FOLLOWING REASONS IN ADDITION TO THOSE HERETOFORE MENTIONED IN THIS MEMORANDUM:

1. Because it affects the commercial, agricultural, and manufacturing interests of the whole country. The Harlem is a part of that wonderful center of activity and development, the port of New York, the greatest shipping port of the world. "To this port," to quote the words of a distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, "80,000,000 of people bring $30,000,000 of the surplus products of their farms, $6,000,000 of the surplus of their forests, $30,000,000 of the surplus from their mines, and more than $200,000,000 of their manufactures. From this port the same people carry inland $560,000,000 imports, and to the collector of this port is paid $165,000,000, 65 per cent of the customs duties of the nation."

2. Because the commerce of the Harlem is a large and constantly increasing part of the coastwise trade of the United States, extending along the Atlantic, a trade unequaled anywhere on the waters of the globe and vastly more valuable to our people than all our foreign commerce.

3. Because upon the peaceful waters of that stream there is now carried by the swift steamer, the three-master schooner, and by the commodious lighter, canal boat, and barge the products of the forest, the field, the mine, and the factory amounting in round numbers to 10,000,000 of tons and valued at over $270,000,000.

4. Because the value of the tonnage carried on that busy stream is to-day greater than the value of the whole export and import trade of the United States with any portion of the world except Great Britain, Germany, and Asia, as has already been shown.

5. Because that stream and its natural extensions, Bronx Kills and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, are essential parts of the canal system of the State of New York, that great continuous and free waterway extending from Duluth to the Atlantic.

6. Because nearly a million people—a population greater than that of any one of sixteen States of the Union, and larger than that of five of them combined—have located their homes and business enterprises on the banks of that stream. Situated as it is, in the center of this great population, the most rapidly growing community in the United States, it is the natural carrier for the provisions that feed this people, for the lumber, the iron, the stone, the brick, the lime, and the other materials that enter into their vast building operations, and for the fuel that heats and lights their homes and places of employment and produces the power that turns the wheels of their busy industries and propels their elevated, surface, and underground railway cars. The docks of this stream are the storage and distributing depots of the bulky merchandise that enters into the daily life and activities of this large and enterprising community.

8. FURTHER DELAY UNWISE.

Only a comparatively small expenditure is now necessary to complete the Harlem Ship Canal. More than 60 per cent of the work has been done. (See Annual Report of Chief of Engineers, 1906, Appendix E, p. 956.) The completed improvement will benefit more States and greater agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing interests than the improvement of any similar waterway in the Union.

It would be a parsimonious and shortsighted policy for the National Government to delay any longer the completion of this important commercial artery. The longer it is delayed the greater will be the inconvenience and injustice to the State and to the city of New York and to the varied interests of the whole country.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield back that time, as no one desires to speak on this side.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this. The bill of last session, which I had in my mind when I made my inquiry of him in reference to the increase of $100,000, it seems upon examination of the RECORD that there was an increase in appropriation of $100,000 in connection with the Indian police, as appears from this colloquy between myself and the chairman.

Mr. CURTIS. But not an increase in the number.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not an increase in the number. [Reading:]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is offset by the salary or wages of the police department.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; very largely; an increase of $100,000 for Indian police.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does not that increase the number?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; only the compensation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the occasion for that?

Mr. SHERMAN. The occasion of the increased appropriation is that the Commissioner found he could not retain the services of the best men at the former compensation, which was $15 a month for a captain and $10 a month for a private. He recommended the increase so that he could pay $25 a month for a captain and $15 a month for a private.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And the aggregate result is $100,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. One hundred thousand dollars; but the gentleman must remember that these officers furnish their own horses. They are largely used to restrain the traffic in liquor.

While I perhaps made an inadvertent reference to that, I wish to explain to the chairman that was the increase I had in mind when I made the inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was out when the gentleman from Maine began reading. This is no increase in the number.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I so understand it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I notice that I answered you last year that they received nothing other than their monthly stipend; I do not know how I could have made that answer. I was in error in that respect. They are furnished their uniforms, and they are also permitted to get rations at the agencies at cost price.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The question and answer that practically covers the whole thing is this:

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do they get anything in the way of compensation by the way of being found?
Mr. SHERMAN. No; they are not found.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They get their food and supplies at cost price?
Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So that does cover the food and supplies proposition, and as I understand the gentleman now, they are furnished their uniforms in addition to their compensation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; they are in addition. We did not last year increase the number of officers at all, but we increased the compensation because the Commissioner had found that he could not obtain the best men in the tribe at the old compensation of fifteen and ten dollars.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have been advised since I made the inquiry of the chairman in regard to the increase of officers that there is only one increase of officers provided in the bill, a superintendent.

Mr. SHERMAN. A superintendent of irrigation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; that is all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the salary of that officer?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is $3,000.

I ask for the reading of the bill, Mr. Chairman, if the minority have consumed their time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and in full compensation for all offices the salaries for which are specially provided for herein for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, namely:

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] has, as usual, clearly elucidated the importance of an increased appropriation for rivers and harbors in his speech a few moments ago, and I am going to take a half minute of five minutes of time and ask him a question or two and let him take the balance of my time in answering them. How are we going to get the money now to do all this increased river and harbor work? The gentleman has studied the matter, and I trust he will answer and give to the House and to the country the benefit of his investigations.

Mr. GOULDEN. There are two ways of doing it, and one is by economizing in appropriations and other expenditures of the Government in which I think we are rather lavish.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In what?

Mr. GOULDEN. In yearly amounts for the Army and the Navy, as an illustration; and secondly, by making posterity, which will be largely benefited, assist in paying for a part of these improvements by the issuance of bonds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman ask a reenactment of the Spanish war tax, or a part of it, to raise a part, at least, of the desired revenue?

Mr. GOULDEN. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to do that?

Mr. GOULDEN. I think it would be an excellent idea to do that rather than to issue bonds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman remember all of the articles that were taxed in that law?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; but allow me to make another suggestion. I think we should favor the enactment of an inheritance tax, as was ably set forth the other day by my colleague from New York [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We did that in the Spanish war tax and also taxed telegrams and bills of lading, checks, etc., and tried to tax express receipts, but the express companies wormed out of that, and did not pay anything to carry on that war; and in addition we could tax stock-exchange trades that are so often and rapidly made, and a thousand and one things that would not depress the people, and yet the people would get the full benefit of the revenues coming from such a law. In addition to that my idea was——

Mr. GOULDEN. I would say, in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], that in the State of New York we tax stock transfers and find it quite a beneficial thing in the way of raising revenues, and I should not oppose it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the gentleman ever found anybody who said that he was oppressed by what is known as the "Spanish war tax?"

Mr. GOULDEN. No; I think not. My only regret is that the express companies escaped that, and they certainly should not be allowed to do so in the future should such a tax be enacted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, if we would reenact at least parts of that tax law and call it a "river and harbor tax" in haec verba, and take the money therefrom and add it to what we usually have for rivers and harbors and what we may economize on and get along the line you have suggested or without that, it does seem to me that in a short while we would accumulate regularly, yearly, an immense fund of money here that could be spent on our rivers and harbors, and when the people saw it going into the rivers and harbors, as they saw fit, as with the rural routes of the country, I think they would be satisfied and quickly and greatly benefited.

Mr. GOULDEN. I agree with my friend from Tennessee, and would say, as an illustration, that the river, the Bronx, which I have been talking about, had a commerce in 1903 valued at $270,000,000, and it was more than thirty-two years since the Government first began the improvement. It was no fault of the River and Harbor Committee of Congress, but that lies with the Congress itself in not appropriating a sufficient sum of money to complete this and other projects that are now under way, and this is one of the most important.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We would save a great deal of money, in the judgment of our engineers, and our own common sense teaches us that if we appropriate enough money to build a lock or dam, if we would continue their building right along without stopping, we would save money, because there is a great deal of money lost by stopping, reemploying labor, and so forth. I know what has occurred down in my State. They have been delaying the locks and dams on the Cumberland River, and I was told by my good friend Mr. Bryan, of Nashville, who is chairman of Cumberland River Association, that the alluvial soil has accumulated by the acre around the locks and dams and a very wise farmer had put a fence around it and is raising crops on it.

Mr. GOULDEN. I heard the statement the farmer was cultivating the soil over and around the dam, and that is costing the Government many thousands of dollars. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] that something ought to be done and at once, and in my judgment it's up to this body and the Senate to do it. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SECRETARY.

That hereafter no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are made in any Indian appropriation act, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase: Provided, That supplies may be purchased, contracts let, and labor employed for the construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, without advertising as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That as far as practicable Indian labor shall be employed and purchase in the open market made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph, and would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the object of carrying this out in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is made continuous in this bill. If the gentleman had been present when I explained the bill he would have understood what its object was. Year after year this provision and certain others have been carried in the bill relating simply to the current year, and it seemed to us that it lumbered the bill with a lot of stuff after Congress had a dozen or twenty or thirty times decided upon the proposition and set out that provision in the bill. Now, this year by putting in the word "hereafter," if it becomes law, it will not be necessary after this to carry it in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the explanation of the gentleman, but it seems a rather serious proposition to give the Secretary of the Interior, as permanent law, power to make these purchases without advertising.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, that is a limited purpose; limited in amount, you will discover, when contingencies arise where there is not time to advertise; and then he has to make a report to Congress. We have carried that same provision in every appropriation bill for the dozen years that I have had anything to do with it.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I have been inclined to make the point of order to it in previous years and have called attention to it before. This would put it practically beyond the power of Congress to prevent the Secretary of the Interior from purchasing goods without advertising as he may please.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; because when Congress desires to put that limitation upon an appropriation bill they can do so. But rather than have it in the bill every year, making the bill more lengthy than necessary, we thought it was best to make it continuous. Now, the moment Congress desires that limitation inserted it can do so.

Mr. MANN. What limitation?

Mr. SHERMAN. That this limitation should be taken away, they can reinsert the necessary provision.

Mr. MANN. No; it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not if it is a limitation.

Mr. MANN. I do not know any form in which you could frame a limitation covering the subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the gentleman would be able to draw a limitation covering any appropriation in the bill for any year. If he can not, I will draw it.

Mr. MANN. I am not only certain that the gentleman or myself can not do it, but I do not think there is a single gentleman who can do it and it not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been able to do it whenever I thought it was necessary.

Mr. MANN. For the present I will insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman does insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to it going in for the year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, if the gentleman will move an amendment striking out "hereafter," in line 17, page 2, he accomplishes his purpose.

Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order, and the gentleman can offer an amendment and leave out the word "hereafter."

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; we will have it that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to reinsert the provision striking out the word "hereafter," in line 17, and in line 18 strike out the words "in any Indian appropriation act" and insert in lieu thereof, after the word "made," "hereafter."

The Clerk read as follows:

Reinsert the provision after striking out, in line 17, page 2, the word "hereafter," and in line 18 striking out the words "in any Indian appropriation act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "hereafter."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter whenever after advertising for bids for supplies in accordance with the immediately foregoing paragraphs, those received for any article contain conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government, they may be rejected, and the articles specified in such bids purchased in open market, at prices not to exceed those of the lowest bidder, and not to exceed the market price of the same, until such time as satisfactory bids can be obtained, for which immediate advertisement shall be made: Provided, That so much of the appropriations of any annual Indian appropriation act as may be required to pay for goods and supplies, for expenses incident to their purchase, and for transportation of the same, for the fiscal year for which such appropriations are made, shall be immediately available, upon the approval of such act, but no such goods or supplies shall be distributed or delivered to any of said Indians prior to the beginning of such fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. I raise, or reserve, the point of order on the paragraph read. The latter part of it I have no objection to, but it seems to me that instead of putting into permanent law some of these provisions of the bill it is desirable that the policy of the Government that goods shall be obtained after advertisement should be adhered to in the Indian Service more fully than it has been in the past.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the gentleman to raise the point of order against the paragraph beginning with line 20 on page 4.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course it is legislation and was so intended. If the gentleman insists on his point of order, I assume that it will be sustained, and then I shall be obliged to offer, as I did in the other case, the same provision, to apply simply to this year's bill.

Mr. MANN. So far as the latter part of the paragraph is concerned, commencing with the word "Provided." I have no desire to raise the point of order on that, if the gentleman cares to except it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well, then, make your point of order against the first part of it, if that is your determination.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, upon the paragraph commencing with line 20 on page 4 and ending with the word "made" in line 3, page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will offer an amendment to cover that. In this instance, I think, the question is covered by simply striking out the word "hereafter" in line 20. So I move to insert in the bill the provision now covered in lines 20 to 25 on page 4 and lines 1 to 3 on page 5, omitting the word "hereafter" in line 20 on page 4. That makes it apply simply to this year's bill.

Mr. LACEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the word "hereafter" after the word "that," in line 3, page 5. I understand the gentleman from Illinois to make no objection to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not catch what the gentleman from Iowa said.

Mr. LACEY. I move to insert the word "hereafter" after the word "that," in line 3, page 5, so as to have the remainder of the paragraph become a part of the permanent law; so that it will not have to be reenacted every year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us get that as a separate amendment.

Mr. LACEY. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that he would not object to that.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to raise the point of order against both of them, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. SHERMAN. My amendment is to reinsert what was stricken out on the point of order, with the exception of the word "hereafter," line 20, page 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon the amendment. It has not yet been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to which the gentleman makes the point of order.

Insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following:

"That whenever, after advertising for bids for supplies in accordance with the immediately foregoing paragraphs, those received for any article contain conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government they may be rejected, and the articles specified in such bids purchased in open market, at prices not to exceed those of the lowest bidder, and not to exceed the market price of the same, until such time as satisfactory bids can be obtained, for which immediate advertisement shall be made."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is out of order, as it changes existing law. If the gentleman desires to state his reasons, I will reserve the point. The fact that this provision is in the current law of course makes no difference. If there is no statute authorizing it, it can not go in.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a provision which simply relates to the appropriation made for the current year in this bill. Surely the gentleman does not maintain that we can not do that.

Mr. MANN. If the provision would change existing law, then it is subject to the point of order. It is not a limitation, and there can not be any pretense that it is. It is an enlargement of the power of the Secretary and not a limitation upon his power.

Mr. SHERMAN (reading)—

Whenever, after advertising for bids for supplies in accordance with the immediately foregoing paragraphs——

Mr. MANN. It practically amounts to authorizing something which the law does not now permit. If there is any special reason for that, the gentleman may state it. Unless there is some good reason for it, it seems to me to be better when we require Government officials to advertise for bids not to make an exception in favor of certain Government officials as to certain bids.

Mr. SHERMAN. The reason is perfectly plain. It is stated in the terms of the paragraph itself, it seems to me. Whenever, after advertising for bids, those received for any article contain conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government they may be rejected, and before readvertisement for resubmission of the bids such purchases may be made temporarily to supply the temporary necessities of the case.

For instance, the Department advertises for bids supplying vaccine. That is one article appropriated for in this bill. The bid is unsatisfactory and it is rejected. Now, an epidemic of smallpox is on, and is the Secretary or Commissioner to be precluded from buying enough vaccine to be used during the time that he is advertising for new bids?

Mr. MANN. That is covered by the other paragraph we adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. That provides for the exigency.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where?

Mr. MANN. On page 2, which was adopted. There was an express provision that in case of an exigency he may buy without bids and report to Congress, but here is a provision that he may buy without bids and make no report to Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to ask the gentleman if his attention has been called to the current law as it was enacted in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then this is only reenacting a law that has been enacted, is not that true?

Mr. MANN. It is to practically extend for another year what is now the law. That is true; it is not to reenact a law, because if it was a law for the ensuing year it would not need to be in here. What is the purpose of it? I have heard a great many complaints as to the way supplies were purchased by the Indian Department. I do not know whether they were occasioned by this provision or not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is not the question; the question is on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I may say to my distinguished friend from South Dakota that I am willing to submit the point of order without saying anything on my side, because it is so perfectly plain that it ought not to be subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the preceding provision modified, I must concede that the point of order is well taken against the wording as I presented it. I will withdraw the amendment if there is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this: "That hereafter, whenever after advertising for bids or supplies in accordance with this act those received for any article contain conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government, they may be rejected," etc. I am sure the Chair will hold that that is in order.

Mr. MANN. Has the amendment been reported, or will it be? I will make the point of order on the amendment at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Instead of the matter stricken out on the point of order insert the following: "That hereafter, whenever after advertising for bids or supplies in accordance with this act those received for any article contain conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government," etc.

Mr. MANN. That is not a limitation upon the appropriation at all. That is an extension of the power of an officer, a power which he does not now possess; it is not a limitation. Putting something in the bill because it relates to a current provision is equivalent to saying that you can enact any new law, extend the power of an official; that could not be done in an appropriation bill.

As to the first part of the paragraph, I assume that it might not be subject to a point of order because I do not think it changes existing law. They now have the power to rejects bids that they do not like, and have the power to reserve the right to reject bids. It is not necessary to say in the bill that they should have that power to reject bids. It is not necessary to say or to give them the power that where conditions are detrimental to the interests of the Government they may reject the bids. They have that right under the law. The other part of the paragraph, providing that if the bids are not what the Secretary wants he can buy regardless of bids, changes the existing law, and ought not to be inserted unless a good reason is given for it. So far no reason has been given.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will excuse me, I stated a reason, but the gentleman from Illinois may not consider it a good reason. I do not care to waste the time, Mr. Chairman, in further discussion on the point of order. I have stated my contention, and I am ready to take the ruling of the Chair on it, whether it be to leave the provision in or strike it out.

Mr. MANN. I would not say, Mr. Chairman, that any reason the gentleman from New York gave was not a good reason. Whatever else I might say, I would never say that anything which the gentleman from Now York said was not good, for he never does anything but the best.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. So far as this provision in this amendment is concerned, it gives positive authority to purchase goods in the open market, and it is not to that extent in the nature of a limitation. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, $1,300,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add in line 17, page 6, the following:

"Provided, That nothing contained in this paragraph of the bill shall authorize the money herein appropriated to be expended for the support or education of any children of Indian blood whose parents have become citizens of the United States under existing laws and are no longer the wards of the Government; and the education and maintenance of such children are hereby relegated to the States or Territories where such Indian citizens reside."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to the point of order, for the reason that it states simply how this money shall be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools and placing of them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor, $70,000; Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this amount may be used, under direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the transportation and placing of Indian pupils in positions where remunerative employment can be found for them in industrial pursuits. The provisions of this section shall apply to native pupils brought from Alaska.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it is possible for him at this time to inform us how much of this $5,000 has been used and how much of it was for transporting children from Alaska into this country to obtain remunerative employment in industrial pursuits?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I can not state. I have no information before me from which I can give the gentleman the information that he desires.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter all schools for whose support specific appropriations are made in any annual Indian appropriation act shall be classified according to the number of pupils appropriated for therein, as follows: Class 1, where such number is less than 100; class 2, where such number is not less than 100, but not more than 200; class 3, where such number is more than 200, but not more than 400; class 4, where such number is more than 400. The pay of the superintendents of said schools shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on a scale corresponding to the classification hereinbefore directed, as follows: Superintendents of schools of class 1, not to exceed $1,200 per annum; superintendents of schools of class 2, not to exceed $1,600 per annum; superintendents of schools of class 3, not to exceed $2,000 per annum; superintendents of schools of class 4, not to exceed $2,500 per annum: Provided, That the foregoing provision as to pay of superintendents shall not apply to the school at Carlisle, Pa., as long as said school remains under the superintendency of an active army officer: And provided further, That the pay of any superintendent who performs agency duties in addition to those of his superintendency may be increased by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his discretion, to an extent not exceeding $300 per annum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what would happen in case any pupils at a school should vary?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, we appropriate for so many pupils in a school. Now, it can not vary above that amount. If we appropriate for 100 pupils the superintendent goes into a class of 100 or under. If we appropriate for 200, of course he goes into the second class. We might appropriate for 210, though we seldom appropriate in that way, for it usually goes by 25 or 50, and the average attendance where 210 is appropriated for might fall below 200, and in that case the superintendent might be in class 2 rather than in class 3.

Mr. MANN. Suppose you appropriate for 150 and there were only 75 there. What would be the classification?

Mr. SHERMAN. Class 1.

Mr. MANN. When is that to be ascertained?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Commissioner ascertains that in his own way.

Mr. MANN. At the beginning of the year or at the end of the year?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know how he could determine at the beginning of the year what the average attendance would be during the year.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how he could myself. Therefore I do not see how he could determine what would be the pay the superintendent would get until the end of the year.

Mr. SHERMAN. I assume he would determine the salary of the superintendent on the basis of our appropriation here. In other words, if we appropriated for 210 students or 250, he would hold that the superintendent was in class 3. In every case where we specifically appropriate we appropriate for so many children, and this provision applies only to the specially appropriated for schools, the twenty-eight nonreservation schools; and had the gentleman been here when the bill was presented in general debate he would have heard what I said in reference to that.

Mr. MANN. I heard what the gentleman said, but I still was not sufficiently enlightened, being a little bit dull.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, I do not think the gentleman ought to say that. Nobody in the House will concede that he is correct about that. I will have to take issue with him.

Mr. MANN. I heard both the gentlemen discuss the matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. The salary I assume would be fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at the beginning of the school year, based upon the number of pupils appropriated for at each school.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me—I do not intend, I will say to the gentleman, now to insist on the point of order—it seems to me that that provision is going to get the whole system into great confusion if it ever goes into law in its present shape.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course it is legislation. There is no dispute about that, but it is anything but getting the Department into confusion, I think.

Mr. MANN. There is no way of telling under this what the salary of a superintendent at a particular place is going to be.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, it is certainly the easiest thing in the world. Turn to page 43 of the bill. We say, "For support and education of 700 Indian pupils." Now, that is a school of class 4. You can take page 41, "For support and education of 325 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Fort Totten." Of course that is of class 3. Take the page before that, page 40, "For support and education of 160 pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C." Of course that is a school of class 2, and so in reference to every one of these schools we appropriate specifically for so many pupils. Do I make myself clear to the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Perfectly. Now, it will be upon that basis that the salary would be fixed?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. Is there any limitation upon the number of pupils who may attend those schools?

Mr. SHERMAN. No. There is a limitation upon what shall be expended for the support of the children—that they can not expend more than $167 on each pupil. You take a large school like Haskell, for instance, or Carlisle, or Phoenix, it is possible for the superintendent, and he does in fact, maintain more pupils than appropriated for, because it stands to reason that with a large attendance like that the expense per capita would be less than with a small number, like a hundred or a hundred and fifty, for instance.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any noncompetent Indian to whom a patent containing restrictions against alienation has been issued for an allotment of land in severalty, under any law or treaty, may sell or convey all or any part of such allotment, on such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds derived therefrom shall be used for the benefit of the allottee so disposing of his land, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and any conveyance made hereunder and approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall convey full title, the same as if fee-simple patent had been issued to the allottee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the words "noncompetent Indian," found in line 23, on page 9, apply to minors; do I understand they would?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I say the words "noncompetent Indian," on page 9, line 23, would include minor children, would it not, to whom allotments have been made?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; if they were noncompetent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They would be considered noncompetent within the law, would they not?

Mr. SHERMAN. It applies to noncompetent Indians whether minors or not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the chairman whether or not there is any doubt.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; there can not be any doubt.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I thought. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he would object to an amendment something like this in effect. There are a great many minor Indians who are heirs of deceased allottees. There ought to be some way by which their interests in the estate of the decedent could be disposed of without requiring probate court proceedings. I would like to see this amended by inserting on page 10——

Mr. SHERMAN. A bill was passed during last session, which was known as the "Burke bill," which accomplished just what the gentleman desires to have covered. The gentleman from South Dakota, I think, can tell him all about it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Except, Mr. Chairman, it was thought when that law was enacted we could not legislate to effect anything that was in the past, that there was danger of meeting up with vested rights, and we could not legislate as to Indian allotment where the allotment had been approved, and any legislation that would tend to change that law might interfere with vested rights.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not understand the gentleman's bill covered minors. I have had this matter up lately in connection with the Yakima Reservation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My bill affects children as well as adult Indians that have taken allotment since the passage of that act, and provides that the lands of the deceased Indians may be conveyed to the heirs by name, or the Secretary of the Interior may cause the land to be sold and the Secretary of the Interior shall determine absolutely who the heirs are, and his action shall be in all respects final.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does it affect the interests of minors also?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me read the provisions of the Burke bill (reading):

That hereafter when an allotment of land is made to any Indian, and any such Indian dies before the expiration of the trust period, said allotment shall be canceled and the land shall revert to the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain the legal heirs of such Indian, and shall cause to be issued to said heirs and in their names a patent in fee simple for said land, or he may cause the land to be sold as provided by law and issue a patent therefor to the purchaser or purchasers, and pay the net proceeds to the heirs, or their legal representatives, of such deceased Indian.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That does not apply to allotments made prior to that act.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It ought to apply to all allotments which have already been made. On the Yakima Indian Reservation we have many minor heirs of deceased Indians. It seems to me there ought to be some provision by which their interests can be disposed of without their having to go into court.

Mr. CURTIS. There is a provision which authorizes the sale of inherited Indian lands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does not touch the interests of minors.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; it does. The law provides that where there are adult heirs they may sell, and if there are minor heirs their interest may be sold through a guardian, but the conveyance is subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What has that got to do with it? Why should it have anything to do with it?

Mr. CURTIS. That provision was put in the bill so that the interest of the minors might be fully protected, and by the proper court in the county in which he lives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] has expired.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Now, I think those provisions that the gentleman has just referred to are included in the regulations of the Department. My recollection of it is that it provides for the disposition of the lands of deceased Indians, and it is a simple provision that these lands may be sold according to such rules and regulations that the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Now, if there is a provision that these lands can be sold without the interposition of the probate court, I am certainly satisfied, but I do not want any question about it. I think it ought to be provided in that way, and I was simply going to suggest an amendment here so as to cover the case of the minor heir of any deceased Indian's allotment. I have introduced a bill covering this subject and took the matter up with the Department. They do not understand that the law covers these matters and they are very anxious to have legislation of that character.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would ask if the gentleman does not understand lines 23 and 24 to mean that this only applies to patent cases containing restrictions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Patents already issued?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And this provides two ways by which the Indians can alienate their land?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It provides a means by which a minor who has an allotment made to him can alienate his land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would not this turn loose some of these Indian lands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am in favor of this. But I wanted to see if we could not broaden this a little and provide for the minor of a deceased Indian to sell his interest.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will suggest to the gentleman that we get what we can.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that we get this. I would like to ask, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph be passed with the privilege of returning to it later on, if desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent to pass this paragraph without prejudice. Is there objection? There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. STERLING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments joint resolution and concurrent resolution of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 203. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1906, on the 20th day of said month.

House concurrent resolution 45:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Thursday, December 20, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, January 3, 1907.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

Telegraphing, telephoning, and purchase of Indian supplies: To pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection and pay of necessary employees; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, and all other expenses connected therewith, and for telegraphing and telephoning, and for transportation of Indian goods and supplies, including pay and expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, and warehouses for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service shall be maintained at the following places: New York, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco, $315,000.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two with reference to this appropriation. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that the appropriation for the five cities of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, and Omaha is $315,000. I wish to inquire on what basis that appropriation rests, so far as the city of Omaha is concerned?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, as the bill passed the House last year this item was for telegraphing, telephoning, etc., $260,000. The city of Omaha was specifically appropriated for, I think, on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska, at $10,000, and $10,000 in another place was inserted for the support of the San Francisco warehouse, and $10,000 for the St. Louis warehouse. In the Senate all of these provisions were stricken out, and this so-called blanket provision, covering all the warehouses, was inserted, and the $30,000 which had been appropriated here for the three warehouses separately were added to the $260,000, as it passed the House, making it in all $290,000. Now, the appropriation this year is for $315,000, with the expectation that it will more than support these three warehouses, but with the expectation also that the transportation of supplies will cost more this year than last year.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Then the basis, as applicable to Omaha, is the same as the appropriation of last year?

Mr. SHERMAN. Quite so, and possibly more so, because there was a period during the fiscal year ending July last when, not in Omaha, but in another warehouse, the work had to be suspended because the specific appropriation allowed to that warehouse was exhausted. Now, under this blanket provision the work in no warehouse need be suspended, because there is ample provision to take care of them all; and if it took a little more to sustain the Omaha warehouse than it did at St. Louis, it is the purpose of this provision to provide the funds to carry it on.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. But the basis on which your bill rests is the same?

Mr. SHERMAN. The basis upon which this appropriation is made is $10,000 for Omaha, the same as specifically provided for in the bill last year.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, that is satisfactory to me. Because our business is constantly increasing, I was anxious that the amount should not be reduced as to Omaha. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. I renew it. The gentleman in charge of the bill states that the amount was sufficient. Now, as a matter of fact, at one time during the last fiscal year the Indian warehouse at Chicago was almost closed up.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just as I stated. Why?

Mr. MANN. It had not a sufficient amount.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true. Now, we have increased the amount to $315,000.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the increase was intended to cover the cost of transportation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Largely so.

Mr. MANN. I wish to inquire if it is not necessary to appropriate a larger sum of money for maintenance?

Mr. SHERMAN. So far as Chicago is concerned, that is correct. Chicago is a very important point; second to none in importance. As I say, it was unfortunate that this appropriation was so nearly exhausted that for a time—only a matter of six or seven weeks—the work had to be very much curtailed. Under this appropriation that condition can not occur again.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENCIES.

For contingencies of the Indian Service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; also traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law, and expenses of going to and going from the seat of government, and while remaining there under orders and direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for a period not to exceed twenty days; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for, and for pay of special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $75,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not know whether the gentleman in charge of the bill has the information or not, but I wish to ask him a question. All through this bill, and all through all appropriation bills, we find provisions like the following:

Including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; also traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, at $3 per day, when actually employed on duty in the field.

The truth is that this has grown to be a great abuse in the Government. There are a great many officials in the Government, employed at salaries fixed by Congress (in this case at $2,000 per annum), who are permanently on duty at places away from home, and who receive an extra compensation of three times $365, making a very large increase in their salaries; and it has come to the point where a good many of the employees in Washington, as well as elsewhere, seek and urge that they be sent to some other place, as on duty there, in order to get the additional compensation of $90 per month; and there are some employees of the Government who receive more in the way of additional allowances away from home than their original compensation amounts to. And the cost of living in many of these cases is no greater than it would be if they were living where they originally were, because they are transferred not for a day, but for months, for seasons, and sometimes for years. I do not know as to these special agents, and I presume there is no way of ascertaining the exact amount that any of them are paid in the way of incidental expenses, which in this case very likely is the correct and proper thing. But if the gentleman from New York happens to have information on the subject, I am sure that it would be of value to the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I can not give the exact statement. That is a detail that I did not ask for. I could get it for the gentleman; but I can tell him this, which I suppose will satisfy him, that so far as these five officers are concerned, I think they hardly come within the general class which he criticises, and justly so, I believe. These five agents are seldom in any one place for any great length of time. They are sent hither and thither, and here and there and yonder, from one agency to another, and from one State to another, and I think when they get through paying their expenses they are not able to save any very considerable amount out of the $3 per day that they are allowed for these traveling expenses.

I think I have in mind the class of employees to whom the gentleman particularly refers when he says it is substantially an addition to their salaries. For instance, a pension examiner in the field, who may live in Chicago, may be assigned to duty at Milwaukee, and while at Milwaukee he receives his $3 per day for subsistence, and it is possible for him to spend every Sunday, if he so desires, with his family in Chicago. It is possible for him, as he undoubtedly does, to obtain some comfortable home in a boarding house or with some private family, where his total expense would not, perhaps, exceed $8 or $10 a week; so that it is practically, in a case of that kind, an addition to the salary. But with these special agents in the Indian Service, they do not have any such co-called "soft snap" as that. They are sent to all sorts of outlandish sections of the country, if I may use the word "outlandish," where it is pretty hard for them to get comfortable accommodations at any price, and by the time the year ends I think it will be found that they have saved no considerable amount out of their per diem allowance, but it will be found that they have drawn that per diem the major part of the year. They are out nearly all the time. Is that what the gentleman desired to know, whether they were out most of the time?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. These five agents are out most of the time. From this contingent fund are also paid the traveling expenses of the Commissioner, and they are not inconsiderable, because the Commissioner attends the opening of business and the letting of contracts in Chicago, St. Louis, and San Francisco, and the present Commissioner, particularly, has been visiting a large number of reservations and schools. He was in the field, I think, for perhaps four months last year, and undoubtedly all that travel is expensive. It is not paying simply 3½ cents per mile on the railroad, but it is hiring teams to take him perhaps 30, 60, or 70 miles through a barren country, to reach the headquarters of an agency. So the expenses are large.

From this fund is also taken the pay of certain employees who are not otherwise specifically provided for. For instance, if one farmer is provided for at an agency, and the temporary conditions demand the employment of a second farmer, he can be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. My purpose in doing so is to answer a criticism made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to the abuse which had grown up in some Departments concerning the per diem allowance. So far as the postal service is concerned, it was called to our attention three years ago that inspectors would utilize the $4 per diem allowance when they would be assigned to official headquarters away from their homes, where most of their time would be passed and which was virtually their permanent stopping place. So the postal committee, in a bill reported that year, put a limitation providing that the per diem should not be available unless away from their home, their domicile, or their designated headquarters. It had been shown that prior to the establishment of the per diem allowance and under the old practice the agents in the field were allowed their expenses; that in many cases it would aggregate much more than the $4 daily allowance even if granted for three hundred and thirteen days in the year. Since the placing of the amendment on the statute books there has been no abuse in the postal service to our knowledge, and the postal agents in the field now are only entitled to that amount when away from their homes, their official headquarters, or their domiciles.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill to the close of line 19, on page 15.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DIXON of Montana, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with accompanying papers, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

[For message see Senate proceedings of this date.]

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

[For message see Senate proceedings of this date.]

PANAMA CANAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

[For message see Senate proceedings of this date.]

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 203. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1906, on the twentieth day of said month.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointment:

Mr. MOON of Tennessee to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of The Trustees of the Ivey Memorial Chapel against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Substitute for section 1:

"That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office, restaurant, saloon, hotel, apartment house, pool room, theater, or bowling alley, nor during school hours in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages, selling newspapers, or doing other light outdoor work, nor shall such child be employed before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to children between the ages of 12 and 16 years employed in the Senate and House of Representatives, nor to children between such ages who are regularly engaged in learning a trade."

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 20888) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and to provide for the payment of French spoliation claims recommended by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the acts approved January 20, 1885, and March 3, 1891, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY CARRIERS.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. 6903) to increase the salaries of rural free-delivery carriers be reprinted, and that 500 additional copies be printed for the Senate document room.

Ordered, That 500 copies of Senate Document No. 107, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the Senate.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for.

THE KONGO FREE STATE.

Mr. PATTERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas statements have appeared in a reputable New York journal and in reputable journals of other sections of the country that a lobby, alleged to have been maintained by a foreign government, was engaged during the last session of Congress in attempting to influence Senators in their official action upon matters pertaining to the Kongo Free State; and

Whereas a duly accredited consular official is accused in these publications of having sent communications to Senators in an effort to influence their official action: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and are hereby, instructed to investigate all facts in connection with the aforesaid charges and the truth of the same; and that the committee promptly report the result of said investigation to the Senate.

LOAN TO JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION COMPANY.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 6896, proposing a loan to the Jamestown Exposition Company. I observe that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is not at this moment in his seat. He asked that the bill might lie over until to-day, but I am authorized by him to state that he has examined it and has no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not, of course, object to the request made by the Senator from Virginia, but I wish to give notice that when the bill he calls up has been considered I shall ask that the regular order be proceeded with, which will be the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill called up by the Senator from Virginia.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 6896) appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 as a loan to the Jamestown Exposition Company for the purpose of aiding in the payment of the cost of the construction, completion, and opening of the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition on Hampton Roads, Virginia, on April 26, 1907, and to provide for the protection of the Government and insuring the repayment of the said sum of $1,000,000 by a first lien upon the gross receipts of the said exposition company from all paid admissions to the grounds of said exposition and from all moneys received from concessions after the opening of said exposition, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 13, to strike out the word "applications" and insert "application;" so as to read:

That for the purpose of aiding in the payment of the cost of the construction, completion, and opening of the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition on Hampton Roads, Virginia, on April 26, 1907, the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the said sum to be paid to the Jamestown Exposition Company on the request of the president of said company in amounts as follows: Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars upon the passage of this act, $250,000 during the month of January, $200,000 during the month of February, $200,000 during the month of March, and $100,000 during the month of April, 1907. That to insure the application of all said moneys to the purposes for which the same is appropriated the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a suitable person or persons whose duty it shall be to supervise the disbursement of the same when paid, as herein provided, and to make a full and complete report thereof to him as he may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 13, after the word "dispose," to insert "of;" so as to read:

Provided, That the amount hereby appropriated when paid to the Jamestown Exposition Company, as herein provided, shall constitute an indebtedness of the said company to the Government of the United States and shall be repaid by said company to the Treasury of the United States. That for the purpose of protecting the Government and insuring the repayment of said sum of $1,000,000 the Government shall have the first lien upon the gross receipts of said exposition company from all paid admissions to the grounds of said exposition and from all moneys received from concessions after the opening of said exposition. That before any part of this appropriation is paid, as hereinbefore provided, the said Jamestown Exposition Company shall execute, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, an instrument in writing giving and securing to the Government a first lien upon its said gross receipts, and said exposition company shall at the same time guarantee to the said Government, under suitable penalties, that the said gross receipts are then entirely free from liens, mortgages, or other incumbrances, and that it will not pledge or in any way encumber or dispose of the said receipts so as to injure or affect the right of the Government to first receive therefrom the amount to be returned to the Treasury, as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 21, after the word "detail," to insert the word "the;" on page 4, line 4, before the word "last," to insert the word "the;" and in line 5, after the word "respectively," to strike out the words "and in the same manner;" so as to read:

The said Jamestown Exposition Company shall repay into the Treasury of the United States the said sum of $1,000,000 as follows: On the 31st day of May, 1907, said Jamestown Exposition Company shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury in detail the total amount of all said gross receipts received by said company from April 26 to May 31, both inclusive, and 40 per cent of such receipts shall at the same time be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, and thereafter, during said exposition and until the sum of $1,000,000 shall have been fully paid, as herein provided, a like detailed report of said gross receipts shall be made by said Jamestown Exposition Company on the 15th day and the last day of each month, respectively, and at the same time 40 per cent of said gross receipts shall be paid by the said company to said Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 4, line 10, after the word "paid," to insert "each of;" in the same line, before the word "last," to insert the word "the;" and in line 11, after the word "month," to strike out "of 40 per cent of said gross receipts" and insert "respectively;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That from and after the 15th day of July, 1907, and until the said sum of $1,000,000 shall have been fully paid, each of the said payments on the 15th and the last day of each and every month, respectively, shall not be less than $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 4, line 17, after the word "case," to strike out the words:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to supervise the collection and take possession of all said gross receipts and continue such supervision and collection until the full sum of said $1,000,000 has been collected and repaid into the Treasury of the United States, as herein provided.

And to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized by his agents and representatives, by him selected and appointed, to collect, receive, and control the said gross receipts until the full sum of said $1,000,000 has been collected and repaid into the Treasury of the United States, as herein provided, and shall have access to and control of all books of accounts and contracts of said company. And said Secretary of the Treasury shall in such case first pay out of the money so collected such operating expenses as in his judgment and discretion are necessary and appropriate.

So as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That if at any time after said exposition company has received the amount hereby appropriated it makes default in the application or in the repayment of said sum, or any part thereof, as herein required, then and in that case the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized by his agents and representatives, by him selected and appointed, to collect, receive, and control the said gross receipts until the full sum of said $1,000,000 has been collected and repaid into the Treasury of the United States, as herein provided, and shall have access to and control of all books of accounts and contracts of said company. And said Secretary of the Treasury shall in such case first pay out of the money so collected such operating expenses as in his judgment and discretion are necessary and appropriate. In accepting the amount hereby appropriated the said Jamestown Exposition Company shall be taken and held to agree to all the terms and conditions upon which the same is made and upon which the same is to be repaid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I am not sure that I understand the amendment, and before it is agreed to I should like to have it stated again. It appears to me to change the character of the bill very much.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that in line 24 it should read "all the said gross receipts," to correspond with what is stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts propose that as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "control," in line 24, page 4, insert "all;" so as to read "and control all the said gross receipts."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. That April 26, 1907, is hereby fixed as the date for the opening of said celebration inaugurated by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, and that November 30, 1907, is hereby fixed as the date for the closing of the said celebration, and said dates shall apply to the participation of the United States and foreign countries in said celebration and in said exposition, as provided for by acts of Congress approved March 3, 1905, and June 30, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. Before the amendments are disposed of I beg leave to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the amendment of the committee he referred to was one drawn and submitted by the Jamestown Tercentennial Commission, consisting of Messrs. Shaw, Taft, and Bonaparte. He will find the statement in their report. I did not quite apprehend the verbal amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts offered. I beg leave to have it read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 24, page 4, after the word "control," insert the word "all;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized by his agents and representatives, by him selected and appointed, to collect, receive, and control all the said gross receipts, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 as a loan to the Jamestown Exposition Company for the purpose of aiding in the payment of the cost of the construction, completion, and opening of the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition on Hampton Roads, Virginia, on April 26, 1907, and to provide for the protection of the Government and insuring the repayment of the said sum of $1,000,000 by a first lien upon the gross receipts of the said exposition company from all paid admissions to the grounds of said exposition and from all moneys received from concessions after the opening of said exposition, and fixing the dates for the opening and closing thereof."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 189. An act to establish a life-saving station at the Isles of Shoals, off Portsmouth, N. H.;

H. R. 21200. An act to authorize the county of Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the Allegheny River in Allegheny County, Pa.; and

H. R. 21951. An act to authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River in the State of Alabama.

JAPANESE IN SAN FRANCISCO PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. PERKINS, it was, with the accompanying paper and illustrations, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I inclose herewith for your information the final report made to me personally by Secretary Metcalf on the situation affecting the Japanese in San Francisco. The report deals with three matters of controversy—first, the exclusion of the Japanese children from the San Francisco schools; second, the boycotting of Japanese restaurants, and third, acts of violence committed against the Japanese.

As to the first matter I call your especial attention to the very small number of Japanese children who attend school, to the testimony as to the brightness, cleanliness, and good behavior of these Japanese children in the schools, and to the fact that, owing to their being scattered throughout the city, the requirements for them all to go to one special school is impossible of fulfillment, and means that they can not have school facilities. Let me point out further that there would be no objection whatever to excluding from the schools any Japanese on the score of age. It is obviously not desirable that young men should go to school with children. The only point is the exclusion of the children themselves. The number of Japanese children attending the public schools in San Francisco was very small. The Government has already directed that suit be brought to test the constitutionality of the act in question, but my very earnest hope is that such suit will not be necessary, and that as a matter of comity the citizens of San Francisco will refuse to deprive these young Japanese children of education and will permit them to go to the schools.

The question as to the violence against the Japanese is most admirably put by Secretary Metcalf, and I have nothing to add to his statement. I am entirely confident that, as Secretary Metcalf says, the overwhelming sentiment of the State of California is for law and order and for the protection of the Japanese in their persons and property. Both the chief of police and the acting mayor of San Francisco assured Secretary Metcalf that everything possible would be done to protect the Japanese in the city. I authorized and directed Secretary Metcalf to state that if there was failure to protect persons and property, then the entire power of the Federal Government within the limits of the Constitution would be used promptly and vigorously to enforce the observance of our treaty, the supreme law of the land, which treaty guaranteed to Japanese residents everywhere in the Union full and perfect protection for their persons and property; and to this end everything in my power would be done, and all the forces of the United States, both civil and military, which I could lawfully employ, would be employed. I call especial attention to the concluding sentence of Secretary Metcalf's report of November 26, 1906.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 18, 1906.

LEASES IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 4433) to amend an act approved August 3, 1894, entitled "An act concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park," was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill was passed April 20, 1906; the vote on its passage was reconsidered and it was amended, and on the 10th instant it was again considered and amended. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask if that is the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HEYBURN. I notice that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] is not present. When the matter was up on a former occasion he stated that he would rather that it should go over than that the amendment which I had offered should be adopted. As he is not here, I suggest that the bill go over until he is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

PENSIONS FOR NINETY DAYS' SERVICE.

The bill (S. 976) granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the war of the rebellion was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. That bill was passed over when my attention was not called to it. I wish to say briefly in reference to the bill that I hope we shall have an early vote upon the measure, and that I may receive consent to make it the unfinished business at some time in the early part of January. I give notice now that I shall move to take up the bill for consideration on the 3d day of January after the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

AGREEMENT WITH YANKTON SIOUX INDIANS.

The bill (S. 2993) to ratify an agreement with the Yankton Sioux Indians of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the 10th instant this bill was passed and the vote by which it was passed was afterwards reconsidered.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

ADMINISTRATION OF RECLAMATION ACT.

The bill (H. R. 17833) providing for the administration of the operations of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to this bill. The bill was on a former occasion read at length and the amendments of the Committee on Irrigation were agreed to. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no further amendments be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. The bill is open to amendment now in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is open to amendment, but before an amendment is proposed the Chair will, without objection, put the question on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HEYBURN. On page 2 of the bill, line 8, I move to strike out the word "professional" before "experts."

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho what the bill is—what it relates to?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a bill to amend the reclamation act, and the term "professional experts" is used. The Senate amendment reads in this way:

And he shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, select and appoint the scientific, professional, and technical employees of the Service exclusively for their qualifications as professional experts.

It should read "exclusively for their qualifications as experts." "Professional experts" is a self-applied term.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator need not argue that with me, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desired to explain it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to propose a further amendment to the bill by striking out section 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 5 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 5. That until the President appoints a Director of the Reclamation Service, as provided herein, the duties of said office shall be performed by the present Director of the Geological Survey, who shall receive for such services, in addition to any other official salary he may be receiving, a sum not to exceed $4,000 per annum, to be determined by the President and paid from the reclamation fund, said additional sum to be paid to said Director notwithstanding section 1765 of the Revised Statutes or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 328.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the character of this section. The salary of the Director of the Geological Survey is fixed by law. This section proposes that he shall fill two offices by appointment and receive two salaries. It occurs to me that that is not in keeping with either the law or with any previous action by Congress; and so I think that section should be stricken out. It provides that the Director shall receive an additional salary of $4,000 a year by reason of filling two offices by appointment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Has the Senator from Idaho concluded his statement, I desire to inquire?

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought the Senator from Montana rose to ask me a question.

Mr. CARTER. No; I desire to make a statement, if the Senator from Idaho has concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will at this time content myself with having pointed out my objection to this section.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate I will make the statement generally that this bill does not in any essential particular change existing law with reference to the collection of the fund for the Reclamation Service. It does not provide for the application of any moneys collected from any source to the Reclamation Service other than the provisions now existing. It does, however, provide, and, I think, very properly, that the fund known as the "reclamation fund" shall henceforth be appropriated on estimates in detail, just as other appropriations are made.

In the original law it will be remembered that the proceeds of the sale of public lands are applied to the Reclamation Service as a separate fund created for that purpose, to be increased from time to time by the deposit therein of the proceeds of public-land sales. No provision was made for any recourse to Congress after the passage of the original law for any appropriation whatever. Consequently the Reclamation Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, became possessed of a constantly increasing fund, which, I believe, now amounts to about $30,000,000, to be disposed of according to the judgment of the Reclamation Service and the Department of which it constitutes a portion.

It seemed to the committee that the Reclamation Service should submit in advance to Congress a statement of its proposed projects and invite the judgment of that body upon the question of expenditure.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, what the Senator says on this bill is very important, and the feature which he has reference to and is describing is a very essential feature. I wish the Senator would read that part of the bill which provides for appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. Section 4 reads:

That through the Secretary of the Interior the Director of the Reclamation Service shall submit in the Annual Book of Estimates, under the head of Irrigation of Arid Lands, a statement of the amounts proposed to be expended during the succeeding year, under the provisions of the reclamation act, for examinations and surveys, for construction, for operation and maintenance, and for general expenses, including traveling expenses to be separately stated; also the number of persons employed in the Reclamation Service in the city of Washington and elsewhere and the rate of compensation paid to each during the fiscal year next preceding the fiscal year for which estimates are submitted, excluding temporary employees and laborers. The expenditures made in pursuance of such estimates shall be dependent upon conditions of practicability, as developed by the surveys and investigations and upon compliance with the provisions of the said reclamation act and of any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

Mr. HALE. That is sufficient, so far as I am concerned. That is the best part of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. The remainder of the bill, I will say to the Senator from Maine, contemplates a unification of the Service and a greater efficiency through elimination of divided counsel. The portion to which the proposed amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is directed is not uncommon, as I understand it, in legislation.

At the present time the Director of the Geological Survey is ex officio Director of the Reclamation Service, made so by the terms of existing law. The section proposed to be amended by the Senator from Idaho contemplates the continuance of the Director as the head of the Reclamation Service until such time as the President may, in his discretion, appoint a successor. In the absence of this provision of law in the proposed act we should have the anomalous condition of an active business, involving a daily expenditure of large sums of money, left without a director or a head of any kind. The bill guarantees us against that unfortunate condition of affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. How long does the Senator from Montana think it would take the President to find a Director of the Reclamation Service? I presume he is already selected in the minds of certain gentlemen; is he not?

Mr. CARTER. I sincerely hope that the present head of the Service will be continued under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that it is scarcely necessary to duplicate a salary, is it, to an official now in the Service?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The last section of the bill provides for a duplication of salary to be given to one man in the Service.

Mr. CARTER. The Director of the Geological Survey receives, I believe, $6,000 a year. The committee were unanimously of the opinion that the salary provided for the Director of the Geological Survey was not an excessive salary for the duties performed in relation to geological work. This Reclamation Service more than duplicates the duties of that officer. It furnishes a task of the gravest responsibility, requiring constant and assiduous attention. The committee believed that so long as the Director was continued in the position of Director of the Reclamation Service, it was but fair and just that he should be paid from the reclamation fund something commensurate with the value of the service rendered to that department.

Mr. HALE. What would that aggregate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Ten thousand dollars a year.

Mr. HALE. How would the piling up of the salary of the Director, according to this bill, compare with the salary of a Cabinet minister, who has the control of an entire Department?

Mr. CARTER. I understand that it would exceed that of a Cabinet minister; and yet, Mr. President, the fact is that we are paying now to an engineer in the Reclamation Service $10,000 a year—the identical sum proposed to be paid here.

Mr. HALE. What I wish to call the attention of the Senator to is the fact that by this little scheme for the duplication of salary the Director of the Geological Survey would be receiving a salary $2,000 larger than that of any Cabinet minister. I think the Senate ought to know that before it votes on that proposition.

Mr. CARTER. I understand we shall be permitted in the near future to increase, if we think proper, the salary of Cabinet officers to $12,000 a year, and I will say now that I am in favor of that measure, which I believe has passed elsewhere.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Montana a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CARTER. Assuredly.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator from Minnesota puts his question, I wish to ask the Senator from Montana a question. The $12,000 provision for the salary of Cabinet officers has not, as I understand, yet become existing law.

Mr. CARTER. It has not become existing law; but I have suggested that we shall have an opportunity here in the very near future to make it such, and I stated that I hoped when the effort shall be made that it will prevail.

Mr. NELSON. The question I wish to ask the Senator from Montana is, whether under existing law the money expended by the Reclamation Service is provided for through an appropriation of money in an appropriation bill or is the money taken out of the reclamation fund generally, without any appropriation in an appropriation bill?

Mr. CARTER. It is money for the conduct of the Service, and every part of it is now taken out of the fund known as the "reclamation fund."

Mr. NELSON. Without its being specifically appropriated?

Mr. CARTER. Without being specifically appropriated by Congress.

Mr. NELSON. Then, I ask the Senator, ought not section 4 of the bill be amended so as to require that none of this fund shall be expended except through an appropriation? If the Director is to send to the Treasury Department an estimate of the work for each year, ought there not to be an appropriation of the money by Congress to that extent? What is the good of providing for the sending of estimates here unless we follow it up with the requirement that an appropriation shall be made? Unless we do so, could not the Department still go on and expend without limit each year what they saw fit to expend?

Mr. CARTER. My impression is that if the statement is made to Congress as suggested, it would lead either to an appropriation or to a negative of the proposed work. If the Senator thinks it necessary to add a specific requirement that no expenditure shall be made on the estimates until the amount shall have been appropriated by Congress from the reclamation fund, I should have no objection to that kind of an amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I think an amendment to that effect should be made.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I believe that during the last session I offered an amendment providing that no portion of the fund known as the reclamation fund should be expended or paid out except by authority of Congress acting upon estimates.

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the section of the Revised Statutes referred to in section 5 of the bill, which is really the section now under consideration.

Mr. CARTER. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. That section specifically provides:

SEC. 1765. No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service or duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law, and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation.

Now, I call the Senator's attention to the language of section 5, which I have proposed to strike out. It reads:

SEC. 5. That until the President appoints a Director of the Reclamation Service, as provided herein, the duties of said office shall be performed by the present Director of the Geological Survey, who shall receive for such services, in addition to any other official salary he may be receiving, a sum not to exceed $4,000 per annum, to be determined by the President—

Not by law, as prescribed in the statutes, but the amount of salary—

to be determined by the President and paid—

Not by appropriation, as the statute says, but—from the reclamation fund.

That is not consistent with the existing statute. It is not within the exception contained within the existing statute either as to the amount to be paid or as to the fund. The statute provides that the amount shall be fixed by law and that it shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States, in effect as other salaries are paid.

It would seem to me that to enact a law fixing an indefinite, undetermined salary for a public officer already receiving $6,000 a year and to provide that it shall be paid without an appropriation is in direct violation of that section of the statute. I have no doubt that Congress has the power to do it; but the question in my mind is, Should we select one officer of the Government for such special favors, allowing this officer, now receiving $6,000 a year, to add $4,000, or any part of it that the President may see fit by Executive order to determine as his salary, to the $6,000 a year, not to be paid out of the Treasury, as the $6,000 are paid, pursuant to an act of Congress, but to be paid out of a fund that is held without responsibility and which it was sought to control by an amendment which I have heretofore proposed—I think to the agricultural appropriation bill—providing that none of this reclamation fund should be expended except pursuant to an appropriation?

I am in thorough sympathy, I will say to the Senator, with the proposition that estimates should be furnished to Congress, and I would go as far as is suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to provide that the money should not be paid out at all except pursuant to an appropriation. I do not believe in Executive orders disbursing the public funds of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. I will yield in a moment; but I should be glad first to reply briefly to what has been stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, referred to by the Senator from Idaho, does, as he states, relate to payments out of the general fund in the Treasury, but I do not assume that that makes the section itself so sacred that we can not invoke a different rule or apply the same rule to another fund. The Senator realizes that, with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], all sums paid out of the reclamation fund will henceforth be paid only on appropriations by Congress, and the item here referred to, to wit, the salary of the Director, will of course be subject to the same rule as all other items of expense incurred chargeable to that fund.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like right there to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am interested in this debate, but I beg to call attention to the fact that we are proceeding under Rule VIII, and that indefinite discussion is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. The five-minute rule is in force.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The five-minute rule applies.

Mr. HEYBURN. I submit to the five-minute rule. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to this anomalous condition——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that he can only proceed now by unanimous consent, as Rule VIII limits each Senator to one speech not exceeding five minutes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am speaking to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the rule to be as stated.

Mr. HEYBURN. That does not apply to an interruption if a Senator has the floor.

Mr. CARTER. It being quite evident that I have exhausted my five minutes, I surrender the floor to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. HEYBURN. With the permission of the Senate——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Idaho proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not desire to extend my remarks beyond the necessity of understanding the position of the Senator who reported the bill. He suggests now that the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and which he intimates will be acceptable to the committee, will cure the evil. That would be true if it were not for the latitude given the President to fix an indefinite salary. It is impossible for us to make an indefinite appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The last section would go out, whether the amendment suggested by the Senator from Minnesota be adopted or not.

Mr. HEYBURN. For that reason I was directing attention to the inconsistency of allowing the section to remain in the bill. The amendment to section 4 is all right. It applies, in part, to section 4, but section 5 must go out.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], who has this bill in charge, that I hope he will not accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Minnesota and incorporate it herewith as a part of this bill. I do not believe that that change in the irrigation law should be made without very considerable consideration. The fund at the present time is at the disposal of the irrigation service to expend for the particular purposes which Congress has directed. I am impressed with the belief that if it shall require a separate appropriation before any work can be entered upon, it will delay unnecessarily the work of reclamation.

This fund has been created for a specific purpose. It differs from ordinary work where the appropriation has to come from the general fund in the Treasury. Here is a fund created for a specific purpose, namely, to be devoted entirely to the reclamation of arid lands. I do not think that an appropriation should be required out of that fund every time any work is to be entered upon, because the fund has already been appropriated, set aside, and devoted to that purpose.

I am not prepared at this time to enter fully upon a discussion of that proposition. I only say that I think wisdom suggests that we do not take up so important a question as that simply as an amendment to a pending bill, but let it come from a committee after it has been considered by it.

Mr. HALE. Let the whole bill go over.

Mr. FULTON. I am perfectly willing that the whole bill shall go over, so far as I am concerned. I have not studied it sufficiently to say whether I favor the bill as it stands or not, but I am decidedly against changing an existing law under which we have been working for years in the irrigation system by an amendment sprung right here at this moment.

Mr. TELLER. This is a very important bill, and I do not think we can discuss it properly under the five-minute rule. Therefore I object to its further consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will lie over without prejudice.

Mr. HALE. I present and should like to have printed a proposed amendment to the reclamation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed will be printed and lie on the table.

CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that that bill lie over.

Mr. LODGE. I think the bill had better go over. The Senator in charge of it is not present. But I ask to present a substitute for the first section of the Senate amendment, which I think meets the objection to it. The first section of the Senate amendment as it now stands seems confused.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the proposed substitute for the first section read?

Mr. LODGE. It need not be read. I ask that it be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I likewise offer a substitute for the first section of the bill, which I ask to have printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute to section 1 will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HEYBURN. I also offer an amendment to the child-labor bill, and ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, with reference to the child-labor bill, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a table which is found in Bulletin 68 of the Department of Commerce and Labor, showing the percentage of child labor in the various cities in the country. The table is on page 10 of the bulletin.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Comparison with other cities.—The table below gives number and percentage of breadwinners comprised in the child population 10 to 15 years of age for each city that had a total population of over 50,000 at the Twelfth Census. This table has been introduced in order that the figures for the District of Columbia may be readily compared with those for other cities. It is noticeable that the District has the same percentage of child breadwinners as the city of Boston, Mass. There are 12 cities in this list which have a smaller percentage than that of the District of Columbia. These 12 cities are: Cambridge, Mass.; Denver, Colo.; Duluth, Minn.; Grand Rapids, Mich.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Lynn, Mass.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Oakland, Cal.; Portland, Me.; Salt Lake City, Utah; San Antonio, Tex., and Somerville, Mass.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1336) providing for the allotment and distribution of the tribal funds of the Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians in the State of South Dakota was announced as next in order.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, a House bill general in its provisions and covering the same subject has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The bill, the title of which has been read, applies to a particular tribe. I therefore ask that it be passed over and be placed on the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

The bill (S. 1337) providing for the allotment and distribution of the tribal funds of the Sisseton and Wahpeton tribes of Sioux Indians in the State of South Dakota was announced as next in order.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the statement made by me in regard to the preceding bill applies also to this bill, because the facts are the same. These bills on the Calendar simply apply to particular tribes, while the House bill, to which I have referred as having been reported from the committee, is general in its application.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over and placed on the Calendar under Rule IX.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 24, in relation to Federal aid in the restoration of San Francisco, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that be passed over. It is an adverse report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

ARMY VETERINARY SERVICE.

The bill (S. 3927) to increase the efficiency of the veterinary service in the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. That bill has been read, and I should like to occupy the floor for two or three moments to explain, briefly, what the bill provides. It relates to the veterinary service of the Army. Formerly veterinary surgeons were either taken from the enlisted force or the Department hired as many "horse doctors," as they were termed, as were necessary to supply the regiments of cavalry and artillery. That was found to be a poor policy, because the men hired for that purpose were not sufficiently educated and capable. A few years ago a law was enacted which provided that a certain number of the veterinary surgeons should have the pay and allowances of second lieutenants, and outside of that number a certain number of others should be employed at $75 a month. That plan has been found to be inefficient, and is growing more and more so. To-day horses are high in price and hard to get. They should have good care or we lose a great deal of the money invested in them, because of the ravages of disease and death. There is a great demand for good veterinary surgeons. There is also a great demand for veterinarians with sufficient scientific education to enable them to act as inspectors in the Department of Agriculture. We have, by recent legislation, made it necessary for that Department to hire many hundreds of such men in the inspection of meats and for inspection service concerning our domestic animals.

Now, the pending bill proposes to take the old force now in Army service and discharge them all, except such as have been found satisfactory and efficient and have been in the service fifteen years; these to be commissioned as first lieutenants without further examination, they having had fifteen years' service and been found satisfactory. Then so many of the other old employees as may pass the examination, physical, mental, and otherwise, may be admitted. To make up the balance of the force necessary, citizens of the United States, between the ages of 21 and 27, single, and graduates of veterinary colleges, may apply, and, upon passing the examination, receive commissions and all the pay and allowances of second lieutenants. But they do not have the rank. After ten years' satisfactory service these men receiving pay and allowances of second lieutenants may be promoted to the pay and allowances of first lieutenants, and they may also have at the end of their active service, when 64 years old, retirement as first lieutenants. That is really all there is to the bill.

In other words, the force will be composed of, first, the old men who have put in fifteen years of good service who will have the pay and allowances of first lieutenants. The old men with less than fifteen years' service can take examinations and, if they pass, be admitted with the new men and come in as second lieutenants and serve a number of years, after which time they will receive the pay and allowances of first lieutenants. They will all be subject to the laws, rules, and regulations of the Army and the Department. They will have the pay and allowances, retirement, pensionable status, etc., and will be short merely in the matter of rank.

Mr. HALE. I am not sure, after the explanation made by the Senator from Wyoming, that this bill does not either establish in terms a new corps—a veterinary corps in the Army—or make such provision that the inevitable result will be the establishment of such a corps. I am not yet ready to agree to swelling the Army by the increase of different corps or departments in that branch of the service. Therefore I must for the present ask that the bill go over.

Mr. LODGE. Before the bill goes over, I merely wish to say that when we had up here some years ago a bill for the creation of a veterinary corps, with colonels and majors, and giving them rank, I was entirely opposed to it, and did everything I could to defeat it. It was defeated in the Senate by a very narrow margin indeed. This bill, if I comprehend it—it was gone over very carefully in committee—establishes no corps and confers no rank.

Mr. WARREN. It does not even squint at the establishment of a corps.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least. There is no possibility of establishing a corps under it. It simply provides what the pay and allowances shall be of men who have given faithful service in the now existing department, and who do not receive proper pay and allowances. It is drawn with the utmost care to avoid the creation of a corps and so as not to confer any rank. It would not have received my support if it had not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. Just a moment, if I may be allowed a word. I have no objection to the bill going over, as I desire that the Senator from Maine, and every other Senator, may become well acquainted with its terms.

I wish to say, however, in the same line with the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that this bill establishes no corps. In fact, it seeks to avoid anything of that kind. It is a bill which, in my judgment, will pay for itself many times over in the money which it will save to the United States.

I am willing that the bill shall go over, but I will say that I expect soon to call it up and get an expression and, I hope, final passage.

Mr. HALE. That course is eminently fair. One reason why I want more opportunity to examine the bill is that when the old veterinary corps bill was before the Senate, to which and to his opposition to it the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has referred, I was unwarily led to favor it. I found out afterwards that I was wrong; that I ought not to have favored it. The Senator from Massachusetts and the other Senators who acted with him and voted with him were right and I was wrong, and that has led me to give more thought, perhaps, and investigation to the subject than I otherwise would have done.

If I am convinced by examination that this class of employees in the War Department is needed and that the bill does not either provide for or lay the foundation of an additional corps I shall not, when the Senator calls it up hereafter, make any further objection to it. But in the meantime I wish to look at it a little further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. SPOONER. Before this matter passes from the consideration of the Senate, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] for information. I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say that the bill provides that after the veterinary surgeons have been commissioned, and after they have reached the age of 64, receiving the pay of first lieutenants—second lieutenants first, and then promoted to the pay of first lieutenants—they shall be placed on the retired list. Is that correct?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I desire to ask the Senator if there is now any provision of law under which a person, who has no rank in the Army, can go upon the retired list and, if in that respect, the bill is not an innovation? I am asking only for information, and am not antagonizing the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I may say the present law as to veterinarians is an innovation in that the compensation is measured as being equal to that attaching to the rank of second lieutenants, etc., though the rank is differently conferred. The proposition in this bill is exactly the same, except that it has been found necessary to provide better compensation, and it is added in two ways: First, that after ten years of satisfactory service they may receive the pay, etc., of first lieutenants, and going in as they do, between the ages of 21 and 27 years, they may have before them the certainty of retired pay at three-quarters of their salary in active service as first lieutenants when they get to be 64 years of age.

Mr. SPOONER. It was the matter of retired pay which attracted my attention and led me to propound to the Senator from Wyoming the interrogatory which he has not answered, but which I know he can answer, whether under any law heretofore passed there can be placed on the retired list of either the Army or the Navy a person who has had no rank in either?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him for a moment. I understand that under the law there are only two classes in the Army, one class known as "commissioned officers" and the other as "enlisted men;" that the veterinary surgeons, so called, now in the Army come under the head of enlisted men and are not commissioned officers, and would not be entitled to any pension or be entitled to be put on the retired list.

Mr. SPOONER. That was my understanding, but——

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President, at the present time a certain percentage of the veterinarians in the Army are commissioned as veterinarians, with the pay and allowances of second lieutenants; the balance are simply employed civilians.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. PROCTOR. But not with the rank.

Mr. WARREN. Not with the rank. This bill proposes, instead of having part of them hired men, if you please, and the other part second lieutenants, that they shall all start with the pay and allowances of second lieutenants. This bill simply adds two features, one that they shall go to the pay of first lieutenants after ten years' service and the other that they shall have, after they are 64 years old, three-quarters of that pay.

If the Senator means that there is some general statute to which this bill is repugnant, I think an examination will convince him it is a matter of legislation whether we pay three-quarters retired pay, and if we say in this measuere they shall have three-quarters pay, that is all there is to it. It is not repugnant to any legislation we now have on the statute books.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator must understand my question. Here is the word "retire." Is that the word used in the bill, or is it the word the Senator from Wyoming used?

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill says—

The President may, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint and immediately retire them.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that that applies to two men, one seventy-odd years old and the other 67 years old, who, notwithstanding the fact that they have long since passed the age at which Army officers may be retired, are in the service because the United States has been compelled to avail itself of their services. That merely applies to two individuals.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not sure that I object to that, but what I want to get at is whether this is not entirely an innovation; whether there has ever been a case——

Mr. WARREN. In one sense it is an innovation, and innovations have been made many times by legislation when we have placed men individually upon the retired list who would not have been entitled to it except by the act itself.

Mr. SPOONER. But never, I guess, unless they were men who had had rank in the Army or Navy?

Mr. WARREN. Possibly; but we make the rank or not, as seems best, by legislation, and the same as to retirement.

Mr. SPOONER. Here are men who have no rank, who are given the title of first and second lieutenants in order to measure their compensation, and it is provided that when they shall have reached a certain age they shall be retired (of course, that is pensioned) on three-quarters of their pay.

Mr. HALE. That is a new feature.

Mr. WARREN. Whether it is new or not I see nothing objectionable in it any more than in retiring judges and others and Army and Navy enlisted men as well as commissioned officers.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not discussing the merits of it. I am talking about the fact.

Mr. WARREN. And it is the fact that the principle is not new.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that this discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. PROCTOR. We have a law, well understood, in regard to the retirement of commissioned officers. We have another one in regard to the retirement of enlisted men. Ought we not to keep those classes distinct, just as they are now under the general law, and if we see fit to add any for special service by name, as has sometnmes been done, it can be done? But it seems to me that any change adding a class to either is of doubtful policy. I think the two lines ought to be kept clear and distinct and separate as they are now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, under objection. The next case on the Calendar will be stated.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The bill (S. 5965) to establish the plan of a ship canal to be constructed in the Panama Canal Zone, ceded to the United States by the Republic of Panama under the provisions of the treaty promulgated on the 26th day of February, 1904, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the bill, of course, will go over, as it has gone over, but I will venture just a word. It is a bill that I reported as a minority of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals for the establishment of a canal in the Canal Zone, two-thirds of which, or three-fourths of which would be a sea-level canal, leaving a lock-level canal between Gamboa and Pedro Miguel, to go through the Culebra cut, etc.

I observe that in the President's message on yesterday he has admitted, if I understand his message at all, that there is a great state of doubt, in his mind at least, about the permanency of the dam at Gatun. The least doubt about that destroys any possible committal of the Government of the United States to its construction until that doubt is solved, for on the plan proposed and acted upon at the last session of this Congress, when the sea-level canal was rejected by a small majority, the Gatun dam was then and is now and will forever be the absolute key to the construction of a lock canal through the Isthmus Zone.

I had the honor to suggest, merely for the purpose of attracting the attention of the Congress of the United States to it, a plan that would make a sea-level canal from Gamboa to the Caribbean Sea and a sea-level canal from Pedro Miguel to the Panama Bay. I proved by every engineer who was examined that not only was it practical and feasible, but an excellent arrangement—a perfectly safe arrangement in the opinion of every one of them. But it did not come from an engineer; it came from a layman. It had no acceptance amongst the gentlemen of learning and skill who so far have done no more, in my judgment, than to confuse the country, and especially to confuse Congress, in regard to the proper type of canal to be located through the Isthmus.

Mr. President, when the President of the United States comes out, after his earnest demand upon Congress for the passage of the bill of the minority of the committee locating the dam at Gatun, and expresses a doubt about that, we can only say, "Your doubt is too late, Mr. President, to save your reputation as an engineer officer, but it may be in time to save this Government from enormous loss."

JOHN T. RENNIE.

The bill (S. 5283) for the relief of John T. Rennie was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John T. Rennie $353.23, on account of expenses incurred as United States consular agent at Durbin, Natal, South Africa, in the transshipment and handling of a cargo of coal being shipped to Cavite, P. I., for the Navy Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 6229) to authorize the sale of public lands for cemetery purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 11, before the word "one," to insert "not less than;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and convey to any municipal corporation, religious or fraternal association, or private corporation, empowered by the laws under which such corporation or association is organized or incorporated to hold real estate, not to exceed 40 acres of any unappropriated public lands of the United States for cemetery purposes, upon the payment therefor by such corporation or association of the sum of not less than $1.25 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that immediately following the word "unappropriated," in line 8, the word "nonmineral" be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the word "unappropriated," in line 8, to insert the word "nonmineral;" so as to read:

Forty acres of any unappropriated nonmineral public lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. It occurs to me that after the words "real estate" in line 7 there should be inserted the words "for each purpose." As the bill now reads it provides that a "private corporation, empowered by the laws under which such corporation or association is organized or incorporated to hold real estate," may receive this grant. It should be a corporation authorized to hold real estate for cemetery purposes only. I have in point a case that has recently arisen, of two rival towns, each of them striving to outdo the other in growth. One of them conceived the idea of establishing a cemetery in the enemy's ground, so as to make it unattractive as a place of business and residence, and they were getting along pretty rapidly with their attempt until their motive was discovered and headed off.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the word "estate," it is proposed to insert the words "for such purpose."

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that will not accomplish the desired result. Except in the title of the bill, its purpose has not been stated up to that point, and I think if the Senator from Idaho will read the bill in full he will find that where in line 9 the words "for cemetery purposes" occur it covers it absolutely.

Mr. HEYBURN. One applies to the use of the land and the other applies to the character of the corporation. My amendment goes to the character of the corporation, and the language referred to by the Senator applies to the use of the land.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then instead of "for such purposes" the Senator would have it read "for cemetery purposes," because the purpose has not been stated in the bill up to that point.

Mr. HEYBURN. Every corporation is organized for a purpose expressed in the articles of incorporation. A corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing ought not to be allowed to purchase land, even to be used for cemetery purposes. It should be a corporation that would be amenable to the laws and restrictions and limitations of the State regarding the class of corporations that might hold this land.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend it by inserting "for cemetery purposes" instead of the words used by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is immaterial. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMISSION OF TAXES TO CERTAIN INSTITUTIONS.

The bill (S. 3702) for the relief of the Gurley Memorial Presbyterian Church, of the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the trustees, or other authorized representatives, of the various religious and educational institutions mentioned herein, the sums set forth in their respective cases, said amounts having been heretofore erroneously paid by the said religious and educational institutions on account of special assessments or taxes levied against such religious and educational institutions, and which character of assessments or taxes the court of appeals of the District of Columbia heretofore held, in the case of the District of Columbia against Sisters of the Visitation, of Washington, reported in volume 15, Tucker's Reports, page 300 et seq., to be illegal and void and not a charge against such property.

Educational properties: Corcoran Gallery of Art, $161.53; Columbian University, $135.05; medical and dental department, National University, $77.38; Howard University, $613.14.

RELIGIOUS PROPERTIES: Church of the Covenant, $167.01; Shiloh Baptist Church, $9.70; Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, $214.32; St. Matthew's Church, $300.48; All Souls Church, $114.32; Epiphany Church, $12.23; Fourth Baptist Church, $66.18; Universalist General Convention, $76.95; St. Paul's English Lutheran Church, $145.52; Marvin Methodist Episcopal Church, $17.94; Westminster Presbyterian Church, $44.76; Lutheran Church, $16.18; Mount Moriah Baptist Church, $48.60; Gonzaga College (St. Aloysius Church), $79.40; vestry of St. Mark's Parish, $41.31; Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, $70.21; German Baptist Brethren Church, $44.45; Mount Jezriel Church, $12.85; Washington Seventh Day Adventist Church, $49.56; Ninth Street Christian Church, $52.27; Douglas Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, $23.05; Israel Baptist Church, $14.48; Missionary Board Brethren Church, $22.96; St. Cyprian's Church, $82.66; East Washington Station Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, $20.30; Methodist Protestant Church, $192.95; First Colored Baptist Church, $25.83; Ebenezer African Methodist Episcopal Church, $24.72; B. T. McCoy and others, trustees of church, $90; First Baptist Church, Mount Pleasant, $375; Mount Pleasant Congregational Society, $79.96; vestry of Tacoma Parish, $35.69; Memorial Church of the United Brethren in Christ, of Washington, D. C., $69.19; Gurley Memorial Presbyterian Church, $200.24; Presbyterian Alliance, $86.07; St. Anthony's Church, $122.50; Brookland Baptist Church, $35.85; vestry Emanuel Protestant Episcopal Church, $35.60.

Provided, That the amounts herein authorized and directed to be paid shall be payable out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. The title should be amended by inserting after the words "District of Columbia" the words "and for other purposes," as the bill originally covered one church only, whereas other institutions have been added.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the Gurley Memorial Presbyterian Church, of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

COAL-LAND LOCATIONS IN ALASKA.

The bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the assignees of coal-land locations to make entry under the coal-land laws applicable to Alaska, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. I see that a motion to reconsider has been entered in this case, although I do not know by whom, and I think the bill had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair invites the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to the fact that he entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not ready to take that up to-day, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over without prejudice.

NORTH DAKOTA STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The bill (S. 6134) providing for the conveying to the State of North Dakota of certain tracts of land for the use and benefit of the North Dakota State Historical Society was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. I do not see the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] present, and I think the bill had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey the bill will lie over, without prejudice.

INFORMATION CONCERNING CROPS BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 6248) to amend section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At a previous session the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] objected to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HALE. Let it go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF INDIAN WARS.

The bill (S. 2887) granting increase of pensions to soldiers and sailors of the Indian wars under the acts of July 27, 1892, and June 27, 1902, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

JAMESTOWN TERCENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The bill (S. 5825) to authorize the United States Government to participate in the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition on the shores of Hampton Roads, in Norfolk County, Va., in the year 1907, and to appropriate money in aid thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. That matter has been passed upon already, I think, on the appropriation bill. That is the old original bill.

Mr. MARTIN. It may as well be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

CAPT. WILLIAM N. HUGHES.

The bill (S. 5660) for the relief of Capt. William N. Hughes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Capt. William N. Hughes, United States Army, retired, detailed July 14, 1902, for duty at East Florida Seminary, Gainesville, Fla., shall be held and considered as having been detailed under the act of November 3, 1893.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATORS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 3237) providing for public administrators in Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill may go over, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] not being present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, the bill will lie over without prejudice.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections "That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah."

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go to Rule IX.

Mr. LODGE. As it is liable to give rise to some debate, I think it had better go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the Calender under Rule IX.

CLAIMS OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The bill (S. 5951) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered, and the bill will lie over without prejudice.

ROBERT D. BENEDICT.

The bill (S. 2385) for the payment of Robert D. Benedict for services rendered was read.

Mr. CLAY. The bill covers a small item, but it is undoubtedly a bad precedent. It provides for the payment of legal expenses for a clerk of a district court in defending an individual case brought against him. I should like to ask if there is any report accompanying the bill?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; there is a report accompanying it.

Mr. CLAY. It is a small matter, but it is a bad precedent.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report accompanying the bill. Does the Senator from Georgia object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLAY. Is the report long or short?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a very long report.

Mr. CLAY. I think the bill had better go over. It is such a small item that I regret to object to it, but still it is a bad precedent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

RAILROAD LINE, ETC., IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 6358) to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph and telephone line in the district of Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I think the bill had better go over. It is a very important measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The bill (S. 6255) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

PROOF OF CITIZENSHIP IN LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 2527) to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER. As there is no written report accompanying the bill, I simply desire to state briefly what its object is.

When we had our political judges and clerks during Territorial days the records were not always kept with a great deal of care. It was a time when the public lands were being taken up very rapidly in the Red River Valley, and a great many people of foreign birth were settling in the country at that time. Before final proof could be made upon any land it was necessary that the claimant should be admitted to full citizenship. A great many of the claimants presented themselves and were duly admitted—that is, the testimony of two witnesses was taken in open court, the parties were sworn, the testimony of the applicant was also taken, and the party admitted to full citizenship.

But in making the record, instead of making the usual entry that such a party appeared and was duly sworn and testimony was taken, and that upon the hearing the party was admitted to full citizenship in the United States, blank forms were kept for that purpose, and such blank forms contained an affidavit for each witness, also the affidavit of the party desiring to become a citizen, and also the judgment of the court. It was a blank form in a book kept for that purpose.

In making up the entries the names of the parties were placed in these records, the names of the witnesses, and the fact that they were duly sworn, but there is no record in any of the cases this bill is sought to cover that shows the seal of the court or shows a single jurat. So when a party desires to get a record of his citizenship in the court he does not get a certified copy of the record declaring that he was admitted to citizenship, but all that he can get from the records is this blank form filled in with his name, without the judge's signature, without the signature of the clerk, and without the seal of the court attached.

This court was necessarily abolished when the Territory was admitted to statehood. There was a successor of the record, but no successor of the particular court, as the functions of that court ceased upon statehood. So in order to get a record of citizenship it is necessary for this record to be corrected, or a showing to be made by the claimant who claims that he was a citizen that as a matter of fact his testimony was taken and that the testimony of his witnesses was taken, and judgment was really directed by the judge in open court, and the clerk of the court failed to make the proper entries. That judgment, in my mind, absolutely admitted the claimant to citizenship without any question, but he has no complete record of it.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from North Dakota——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. HALE. Is this bill to the same effect as a bill on the subject which failed to pass the House yesterday, or has it nothing to do with it?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it has anything to do with it.

Mr. SPOONER. To what bill does the Senator from Maine refer?

Mr. HALE. A bill making good certificates of naturalization where the facts are not stated. The House had quite an extensive debate upon a bill of the kind, and it failed to pass the House; but I think that is a measure more general than this one.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is a bill to cover certain cases. It has been reported twice from the Committee on the Judiciary, the first time by the late Senator Hoar, and it failed of consideration during that Congress; the second time by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. HALE. Is it general in its application?

Mr. McCUMBER. While it is general in its application, it can only apply to these specific cases. The bill is so drawn that it will apply to those specific cases; and if any question should ever arise as to the title of the land taken from the Government, the person will have the record of the court to show that he in fact was a citizen at that time.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator from North Dakota if he will have any objection to amending the bill by inserting, after the word "applicant," the words "in the Territory of Dakota?"

Mr. McCUMBER. Not at all.

Mr. CARTER. I then move to amend by inserting, in line 3, page 1, after the word "applicant," the words "in the Territory of Dakota."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to have a disagreement to the amendment, on page 4 of the bill, striking out the word "citizenship" and inserting the word "qualification." There can be no question but what under the terms of the bill the party will be compelled to establish to the satisfaction of the court which corrects the record the fact that he was admitted to full citizenship. That is a part of the bill, and the bill would be of little value unless he could establish the fact that he was a citizen at that time. This amendment undoubtedly was made, it seems to me, without a great deal of thought of the first section of the bill and upon the supposition that the claimant might not have been a citizen, but merely qualified for citizenship.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the committee striking out "citizenship" and inserting "qualification" will be disagreed to. The first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "thereof," to strike out the word "or," and in line 13, after the word "citizenship," to strike out the words:

But such applicant is hereby declared to have been duly admitted to citizenship, notwithstanding such failure or neglect.

So as to make the section read:

That in any case where an applicant to become a citizen of the United States has heretofore taken the oath provided in the second subdivision of section 2165 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and has complied with the third subdivision of said section, and his said oath or affidavit, or the oaths or affidavits of his witnesses, have been taken in good faith for the purpose of admitting him to citizenship of the United States, and in open court before either the clerk of such court as is mentioned in said action or before the judge thereof, such oath administered by either the clerk of said court or the judge thereof in open court, shall be deemed a full compliance with subdivisions 2 and 3 of said sections; and the failure of the judge or clerk of said court, by reason of neglect or inadvertence, to affix his signature to the jurat of the record, oath, or affidavit of the said applicant, or of his said witnesses, or the failure of the judge or clerk to sign or affix the seal of said court to the judgment or order admitting such applicant to citizenship, shall not be deemed to have invalidated the proceedings for such citizenship.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the record of the citizenship of the person making such entry or final proof shall be established as provided in this act within twelve months from the time the validity of such admission to citizenship is challenged.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator from North Dakota, if he will look at the context on pages 3 and 4, will come to the conclusion that the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee ought not to be disagreed to. The court is obliged, upon certain proof, to order entry of judgment, reciting such facts and the date of the proceedings of the applicant for admission to citizenship, and adjudging that the said applicant was admitted to be a citizen of the United States on the date of the said proceedings therefor, reciting such date. Such judgment shall be attested by the clerk of said court and under the seal thereof, and shall be entered and docketed as other judgments of said court, and the same shall be evidence of the facts therein recited, and conclusive evidence of the qualification of the said applicant at the date of such proceedings to become a citizen, as recited in said judgment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The judgment establishes the citizenship.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is, the prior judgment establishes the citizenship.

Mr. SPOONER. The judgment to be entered.

Mr. McCUMBER. It shows the fact that the party was made a citizen at the time and date at which he appeared before the court.

Mr. SPOONER. On "conclusive evidence of the qualification."

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and that he was duly qualified.

Mr. SPOONER. Now he enters a judgment that the said applicant was admitted to be a citizen on the date named. It makes conclusive, or was intended by the committee to make conclusive, the qualification—that is, the basis upon which the judgment was entered—in order that in a contest for land and otherwise it shall never be open to challenge that the person was qualified to become a citizen.

Mr. McCUMBER. But that has already been declared in the portion the Senator has already read on page 3. That is already declared in the judgment that is to be entered. By striking out the word "citizenship," on page 4, it would indicate that the intention was that the judgment should be that he was qualified for citizenship.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the Calendar may be continued under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. Unobjected cases.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unobjected cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate shall continue the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROOF OF CITIZENSHIP IN LAND ENTRIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2527) to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship.

Mr. McCUMBER. In reading the bill over carefully I think it is proper to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee inserting the word "qualification" was disagreed to, and to allow that amendment to be made. But to make it clear, I move to add at the end of line 10 the following:

And his admission to citizenship on said date.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the amendment of the committee agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And the amendment of the committee agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now I move, as a further amendment, to insert, at the end of line 10, on page 4, a comma and the words "and his admission to citizenship on said date."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROHIBITION OF SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

The bill (S. 4267) to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors near the Government Hospital for the Insane and the District almshouse was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that it shall be unlawful to sell, either by wholesale or retail, intoxicating liquor of any kind at any point between the Government Hospital for the Insane and the District almshouse, or within a radius of one-half mile of the boundaries of either of the said properties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMAN AND CHILD WORKERS.

The bill (S. 5469) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report upon the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical condition of woman and child workers in the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment, on page 2, to strike out from line 3 to line 12, in the following words:

That to enable the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make this investigation he is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for per diem in lieu of subsistence of special agents and employees while traveling on duty away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day and for their transportation, and for the employment of experts and temporary assistants, and for the purchase of materials necessary for said report.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. And for the purposes of this act the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to utilize in so far as they may be adequate the forces of the Bureau of Labor and Bureau of Census.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF ANIMALS, ETC., IN FOREST RESERVES.

The bill (S. 6119) for the protection of animals, birds, and fish in the forest reserves of California, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like a little explanation of this bill from the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I notice that the bill prohibits the taking of these animals and fish in certain areas, but that it allows the Secretary of Agriculture, by rules and regulations, to make the law as extensive as he sees fit or to limit it as much as he sees fit. It seems to me that it is rather a dangerous practice to enact punishment for an offense when we do not even know what the gravity of the offense may be, as it may be limited or extended by departmental regulation.

Mr. PERKINS. The report on this bill is very short, and I ask that it may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report, as requested by the Senator from California.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PERKINS June 11, 1906, as follows:

The Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6119) for the protection of animals, birds, and fish in the forest reserves of California, and for other purposes, herewith report it back without amendment and recommend that it do pass.

This bill is one of very great importance, if we are to prevent the extinction within a very few years of our game birds, animals, and fish. At present there is practically no place where they can be safe from sportsmen and where they can breed in peace. The bill in question simply authorizes that certain portions of public reserve lands may be set apart for the protection of animals, birds, and fish, which reserves shall be recognized as breeding places and protected against incursions of sportsmen. Natural history societies throughout the country, which realize the rapidity with which our wild game is being killed off, favor the measure. The President has set aside, at the request of the Audubon societies of the United States, six barren islands which are used as breeding places for water birds and are good for no other purpose, but there is at present no law which gives authority to protect the breeding birds thereon. The bill herewith reported is principally for the purpose of authorizing the wardens of the Audubon societies to prevent injury to the birds, which have had these places of refuge set aside for them, and as it is in the public interest that such protection be given, the passage of the bill is recommended.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Senate is now proceeding under Rule VIII?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TELLER. And under that rule we are limited to five minutes in the discussion of a measure?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the rule.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to examine this bill. While I am in favor of protecting birds and game, I am not in favor of the General Government attempting to do so within the boundaries of the States. That is a matter which belongs to the States. I do not know whether the islands referred to are within the borders of any State, and for that reason, and as the bill can not properly be discussed under the five-minute rule, I wish to make an objection to its consideration at this time.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his objection to this bill—as it relates only to California and the reservations are within our State—with this explanation: First, we have excellent laws in California for the protection of our birds and game, but there are some persons there who desire to stock up some of the forest reserves with antelope, partridges, and pheasants. Indeed, there is one person who stands ready to contribute several thousand dollars, if necessary, toward stocking up one forest reserve. Heretofore we have had no protection whatever for game in our forest reserves, for the reason that poachers from other States can easily pass into the boundaries of the reservation. Therefore I submit that this proposition, to which the committee have given careful consideration and reported favorably upon it, should be adopted.

The expense which is objected to by my friend from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] can be but nominal, as we now have forest rangers there in the employ of the Government.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Let me correct the Senator.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The Senator from California is in error. I have said nothing whatever about the expense; but what seems to me to be rather incongruous is that we should fix a punishment for the disobedience of a law and then provide that the Secretary of Agriculture should practically make the law, without our passing upon the character of the punishment for it. What I wanted was to have the Senator from California explain what rules and regulations the Secretary of Agriculture could make without practically making the law itself.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, this bill provides that there shall be no interference whatever with the provisions of the game laws of our State. I understand the application of this law would be governed entirely by our State laws. A forest ranger attempting to arrest poachers upon a range would make complaint before any competent court having jurisdiction of the subject.

The bill makes no reference to any islands. I will say to my friend from Colorado the report simply refers to the fact that those who are interested in societies for the protection of game have induced the President to set aside and reserve these islands.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from California to the declaration in the bill that the act of taking or hunting these animals shall be unlawful, except under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. Under that declaration the Secretary of Agriculture could make so many exceptions that they would amount to a prohibition, or he could make so many exceptions to the punishment and to the rules that it would allow such practices to be almost free. It seems to me that it is putting into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and not into the hands of Congress the right to determine what shall be the policy in reference to the destruction of those animals, birds, and fish.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is immaterial to me that this bill only applies to California. My objection to it is that the Government of the United States has nothing to do with the subject; that it is a matter for each State to determine for itself, and we certainly can not debate the bill under the five-minute rule. Therefore I insist on my objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). The bill will go over under the rule.

SURVEY OF FLORIDA EVERGLADES.

Mr. HALE. As I am called from the Chamber, I ask that Order of Business 4335, being the joint resolution (S. R. 65) directing the Secretary of Agriculture to cause a survey of the Everglades of Florida to determine the feasibility and cost of draining said Everglades, and for other purposes, go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Maine.

WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

The bill (S. 6384) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to examine the accounts of William R. Little, formerly a trader at the Sac and Fox Agency in Oklahoma, and to pay to him, or his heirs, such sums as he may be satisfied are equitably due from Indian members of the Sac and Fox tribe to the extent of any funds in his hands or to come into his hands and control belonging, respectively, to such Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF LETTER CARRIERS.

The bill (S. 6075) to regulate the salaries of letter carriers in free-delivery offices was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after June 30, 1906, the pay of letter carriers in cities containing a population of 75,000 and over shall be in seven grades, as follows: Carriers of the seventh grade, being those in the first year of service, who shall receive an annual salary of $600; carriers of the sixth grade, being those who have served one year, who shall receive $700 per annum; carriers of the fifth grade, being those who have served two years, who shall receive $800 per annum; carriers of the fourth grade, being those who have served three years, who shall receive $900 per annum; carriers of the third grade, being those who have served four years, who shall receive $1,000 per annum; carriers of the second grade, being those who have served five years, who shall receive $1,100 per annum; carriers of the first grade, being those who have served six years, who shall receive $1,200 per annum for each year of service thereafter.

SEC. 2. That in cities and towns containing a population of less than 75,000 the letter carriers at free-delivery offices shall consist of five grades, as follows: Carriers of the fifth grade, being those in the first year of their service, who shall receive an annual salary of $600; carriers of the fourth grade, being those who have served one year, who shall receive $700 per annum; carriers of the third grade, being those who have served two years, who shall receive $800 per annum; carriers of the second grade, being those who have served three years, who shall receive $900 per annum; carriers of the first grade, being those who have served four years, who shall receive $1,000 per annum for each year of service thereafter.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I desire to offer, to be known as "section 3;" and after its adoption section 3 may be changed to section 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. Rural free-delivery carriers shall receive salaries at the rate of $900 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the bill provides that the increased salaries shall take effect "after June 30, 1906." I move to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

That after June 30, 1907, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know what Senator is in charge of this bill, but I confess that I am unable to understand why one person for carrying the mails should receive a thousand dollars a year, while another person carrying the mails should receive but $600 a year. The character of the service is not of such a nature that an additional year or two makes the services of one man worth $400 more than the services of another man. The man, it seems to me, who carries the mail between certain points and does the work properly, though it is his first year, should receive exactly as much as some other man who would do that work who happened to be in his second or in his third year. I should like to have some reasonable explanation, before voting on this bill, as to why we should make the distinction that is made here between the several classes of one, two, three, and four year men.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I did not expect this bill to come up to-day and have not with me the data which I had intended to present to the Senate in full explanation of it. The bill, however, has the substantial support of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, and I understand that in the House of Representatives a similar sentiment prevails in favor of this increase. There is no intention to discriminate against any other class or branch of the postal service. It may be that there are other classes that merit an increase of compensation, but the case of the letter carriers appeals to everyone conversant with our postal system as preeminently meritorious. The men have not had their wages increased in a great many years. They are located chiefly in cities, where the cost of living has admittedly increased very greatly. Whatever opposition there might have existed to this legislation in past Congresses, so far as my observation goes, has entirely disappeared, and there is now a practical unanimity in favor of this increase.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the fact that the cost of living has increased just as much to the $600 man as it has to the $1,000 man. I see no reason—and that is what I want information about—if an employee is required to serve a certain section of a city this year and he receives $600, why the next year some other man transferred from another part of the city, doing the same character of work, should receive a thousand dollars, without adding in the slightest degree to the burden or to the character of the work done, simply because he has put in one or two or three years more of the same kind of work.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, while the cost of living may have increased in rural sections, yet I think it has increased perhaps more rapidly and in greater proportion in the congested places.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The Senator does not understand me. The point I make is that it has increased just as much to the carrier receiving $600 in the city as it has to the one to whom you propose to give a thousand dollars in the city. It is making a distinction between a year's or two or three years' service for exactly the same kind of work. I am aware that that practice is followed to a great extent in the Government Departments and that a $600 clerk does exactly the same kind of work as a $1,200 clerk, but it has never appeared to me to be just.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it is a question of grading. You have to draw the line somewhere, and the line has been drawn in this instance as indicated in the bill. I have no doubt that the claims of the other classes referred to by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] are very meritorious and ought to be considered, and if he will prepare an amendment I should be willing to have it considered; but you have to draw the line somewhere in this character of legislation. There are unquestionably men in the various Departments of the Government at a thousand dollars a year who do more efficient and intelligent work than men getting four or five times that amount; but you can not make a sweeping increase, and this is a conservative measure and in a good direction.

So far as I am concerned, I shall be very glad to take up with the Senator from North Dakota and have carefully considered by the committee any further legislation in this direction that he may desire to present to the Senate.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask that the bill go over. I certainly will prepare an amendment placing all exactly upon the same level so far as salary is concerned.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to say that all post-office employees ought to be placed in the same grade? If the Senator will run through the workings of the Post-Office Department, he will find that men generally start in at $600 a year and after working for some years are promoted to $700 or $800 or $900 or $1,000, and even to a higher sum. The Senator would not contend, would he, that when an employee begins at the bottom he ought to receive the same salary as the man receives who has been working for ten or fifteen years in the Department? I hardly think the Senator means to say that.

Mr. MCCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to say to the Senator that if he will withdraw his opposition to this bill at this time I will take up with him, in a serious way, the suggestions he has made in connection with the general appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department. He can offer his amendment to the appropriation bill, and, so far as I am concerned, I will see that it is given every consideration and that some effort is made in good faith to carry out his views.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill would be a great deal more just if it placed all the carriers, say, at $75 a month than to place some at $50 and others at $83⅓ a month.

Answering the question of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], I will simply say that in the Departments the new clerk is supposed to do that labor which requires no particular experience, and as the years give additional experience and add to his efficiency, it is but proper that he should receive more, as he does a different character of work or does more work or does the same work better. But if I were hiring a man to go into the woods and chop wood, I would not pay one man $50 a month and another a $100 a month simply because he had worked a longer time, unless he could do twice as much work. The work that is performed by these carriers is all of the same character. There is no question but that a man who is able to read and understand the direction of letters can do just as good work the first year as he can do after he has been in the service ten or fifteen years, and if he does just as good work, I see no reason why he should not have just exactly the same pay. I believe in paying them all fairly and justly. I certainly am in harmony with the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] fixing the salaries of the rural-delivery carriers at $900. A rural carrier has to have a team and two horses and he must give his time from early morning until sometimes late at night in order to do his work properly. I think his wages should be raised; but when we come to the rural free-delivery carriers, I would not be willing that we should pay one man $75 a month and because some other man, doing exactly the same character of work or running upon another route, has worked two years instead of one year, he should receive $150 a month. There is just as much reason for making a distinction between the rural-delivery carriers as there is for making distinctions between the carriers in the cities.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask that it go over. It will come up again very shortly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection of the Senator from North Dakota, the bill will go over without prejudice.

PHILLIP LONEY.

The bill (S. 2781) for the relief of Phillip Loney was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPOONER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go over.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF SAMUEL LEE, DECEASED.

The bill (H. R. 850) making appropriation to pay to the legal representatives of the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, to wit, Samuel Lee, Anna Lee Andrews, Clarence Lee, Robert Lee, Harry A. Lee, and Phillip Lee, heirs at law, in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of the election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCCUMBER. There is an amendment on the table, which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Washington Loan and Trust Company, of Washington, D. C., administrator of the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, the sum of $10,482.80, the same being in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of the election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein.

Mr. ALDRICH. That bill had better go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go over without prejudice.

JOHN SCOTT.

The bill (S. 2951) for the relief of John Scott was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Is there a report with that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I think, Mr. President, that the bill had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go over without prejudice.

REFUND OF EXCESS DUTIES.

The bill (S. 2416) to refund certain excess duties paid upon importations of absinthe and kirschwasser from Switzerland between June 1, 1898, and December 5, 1898, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Messrs. Luyties Brothers, of New York, $3,830.50, for certain excess duties paid upon importations of absinthe and kirschwasser from Switzerland between June 1, 1898, and December 5, 1898.

Mr. SPOONER. It appears that this bill came from the Finance Committee. There is no report with it. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] if he knows anything about it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was reported by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not understand the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. This is a bill to refund excess duties. I was going to inquire why they were not collected under protest in the usual way. It may be they were not paid under protest. If we begin to refund duties that were not paid under protest, it will bankrupt the Government. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over without prejudice.

ADDITIONAL RECORDING DISTRICT IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 6418) to establish an additional recording district in the Indian Territory was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. As the State of Oklahoma is to embrace the Indian Territory, there is no necessity for the establishment of a court there at this time. Let the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

ARTILLERY OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

The bill (S. 3923) to reorganize and to increase the efficiency of the artillery of the United States Army was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar; and the Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill go over. It is a long bill and will probably elicit some debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over without prejudice.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Wisconsin will withdraw his objection for a moment, I should like to make a statement, and then the bill may go over.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; I withdraw the objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I consider this one of the most important bills we shall have to consider at the present session. I do not want to hurry it, but I do want Senators to give it attention and examine it thoroughly, for our conditions are these: We have appropriated nearly a hundred million dollars in carrying out the Endicott Board suggestions regarding the fortifications of our seacoast lines. We have expensive emplacements, expensive guns, and no men, or a grossly inadequate number of men, with which to man them. As an actual fact, the guns already in place are nearly three times as many as there are men to handle and man them for service.

Mr. HALE. The Senator ought to remember that we have no enemies.

Mr. WARREN. That is true. So far as we know, we have no enemies. But I want to suggest this: If we have no enemies and are not to have any guns or emplacements, why do we appropriate in the regular fortifications bill from six to fifteen million dollars every year for fortifications? That is a nut I want the Senate to take into consideration, and crack it if it can.

I am called upon here under my duties as a member of the subcommittee on the fortifications appropriation bill to assent year after year to appropriations for these emplacements and these guns. Then after they are placed they are greased over, sewed up in canvas, and left to lie perfectly useless; and if we had war we would have no men to man them.

With the present mode of warfare, the present management as to loading, training, firing, and handling, the operating of these guns requires men who have had technical education and experience.

They may be educated after they are enlisted, but it takes time. Therefore, raw recruits—State militia and even cavalry and infantry men—are almost useless, because without education or experience in handling heavy coast artillery. This branch is for defense alone and differs widely from small-arms and mobile forces. I am not in any hurry to spend money for these guns and emplacements, but I do insist that it is time for the Congress of the United States to halt in such expenditures of money if we do not intend to provide for the manning and proper use of what we have already laid out in the way of emplacements and guns.

As the bill is to go over under objection, I will merely say now that I shall undertake to call it up at some early date, when I will state with more particularity the condition we are in and what this bill proposes to do, and will ask the Senate to pass upon it "yes" or "no;" and I hope to get this consideration before I and others with me are called upon to pass upon the regular annual fortifications bill and before we fool away, if you please, any more money for something which we do not propose to utilize after the expenditure is made.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from Wyoming says. Congress has been treated for years to the proposition, first, that it is no use to have an army unless you have guns and fortifications, and when we appropriate liberally for fortifications and guns, then the Army turns about and says, "What is the use of having guns and fortifications unless you have men," and we travel on with military expenditures in that way. There is a constant pressure on the part of the Army to aggrandize itself, first for men, then for guns, and then guns and then men, and there is no end to it. I do not say that this bill has not some good features, but in time it will be realized by the Senate and by Congress that the Army, the military establishments, that side of the Government, are constantly engaged in putting forth propositions for increase, first one corps, then another corps——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Maine permit me?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. While the Senator is upon that question, while he speaks of the Military Establishment, I should like to have him take up the other branch, if he will—the Navy. Here we have a Navy that is increasing annually, at a jump, by ten to twenty million dollars of appropriations year after year—a hundred and odd millions last year, a hundred and sixteen or a hundred and twenty the year before, and the Lord only knows how much the present year, while the Army appropriations decrease, and yet we find the Navy passing over to the Army part of its duties. We find that lately the torpedo and submarine branch work, which ought, in my judgment, to be navy work, has been passed over and charged up against the very artillery arm of the Army which we are seeking to protect with more men or else to relieve of some of the responsibility of keeping up these coast defenses.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming is right. The disease is just as deep in the Navy as, and I am inclined to think deeper than, it is in the Army. I have been trying for years, and shall try again this year, to keep down naval expenditures. The military establishments are alike. Each is seeking to aggrandize itself, and each sees nothing in the disposition of the revenues of the Government except to increase expenditures. I do not suppose the people appreciate (I do not know that the Senate does) that two-thirds of the revenues of the Government to-day is devoted to the payment of inheritances from past wars, like pensions, which nobody can stop, and expenditures in view of future wars. Of all the taxes that are laid and all the revenues collected nearly two-thirds are expended for the military in a broad way.

We can get no appropriation for the merchant marine of the country for shipping; river and harbor bills are arrested; public buildings bills are arrested, all because we must spend so much money and such a proportion of the Public Treasury for the military. Senators ought to appreciate that and realize, when they seek appropriations for other purposes, that they are necessarily limited because we are devoting so much of the Public Treasury to military expenditures.

I merely call attention to this incidentally, because it ought to be borne in mind when we are constantly asked to increase these establishments; and I do not take to myself, representing the Senate upon the Naval Committee, any reproach or blame that the naval appropriations are just as extravagant, just as enormous, and just as much a drain on the Public Treasury as the Army expenditures.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Maine, who is always fair, will agree with me that the Army and, indeed, the Navy are doing a great deal of work and service for this country aside from matters of war. For instance, take the rivers and harbors which the Senator mentioned. All of that work is done under the supervision and direction of the Army of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WARREN. Take these outside matters, such as the Panama Canal, etc., the cleaning up of Habana, driving disease out of Cuba, etc. First, the discoveries as to how it all shall be done and then how to handle and do it, such as the extermination of yellow fever, etc., came from the Army and Army officers, and the execution of the work has largely been by them. Indeed, we had in San Francisco very lately an example of what the Army is called upon to do.

The Navy is engaged in certain surveys and certain duties. So it is hardly fair to say that the Army and Navy do not contribute in a quite large degree to the economies and industries of the nation outside of their regular duties in war.

Mr. HALE. That is all incidental. The appropriations for rivers and harbors, expended by the Engineer Bureau of the War Department, are in another bill. I do not reckon them in these items of military expenditure which aggregate such a vast proportion. It is undoubtedly the fact that the officers of the Army and of the Navy are accomplished men, educated men, and if we had a war they would be good fighters. But they all see but one thing, and that is the constant, ever-recurring, everlasting aggrandizement of their different departments.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to have just a moment. Since the adjournment last summer and up until we convened I visited nine different fortifications in various parts of the country, and I have no doubt that if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] had gone to his near-by fort at home he would have found the same conditions that I found at the different forts I visited.

You will find there, Mr. President, guns which cost this Government perhaps $150,000 to build, and they are greased over with vaseline or beeswax, and possibly are lying in the weeds; and you will find the Army has not men enough to care for the guns already mounted. There are plenty of fortifications which have been laid out, for which gun carriages have been built, and the engineers are going ahead building additional emplacements. The Ordnance Department is going ahead building these large gun carriages. The gun factories of the United States are going ahead building these large guns.

Mr. President, I ask any Senator on this floor if he would manage his own business in any such manner—expend thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars for material that is absolutely going to waste, going to destruction simply for the lack of men to care for it, to say nothing about our condition in case of war. There has been added to the artillery branch of the service the planting of torpedoes; there has been added the placing of mines; different and additional duties. I have tried for two or three years to lessen the number of cavalry by five regiments and authorize them to be artillery. But just as sure, Senators, as we are on this floor, you must do something to bring about economy and to care for the guns and fortifications that we now have in this country. It does not matter whether we have any war or not, we must stop the appropriation for these expenditures for guns and fortifications; and if you stopped to-day you would not have men enough to care for what you already have. Fortifications are not like a stable, which you can lock up and go off and leave to take care of itself. There are a number of fortifications and forts which have been left in the hands of a sergeant and three or four men to care for where there is perhaps a half million or a million dollars' worth of Government property.

It certainly strikes me that if we are going to have an artillery corps at all, if we are going to have coast defenses, we must have these additional men to care for the guns, and, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] very truly said, it requires a higher type of man in the artillery service than it does in the other branches. They have to be good mathematicians; they have to be electricians.

I hope that at some early day, if the Senate will not consider the bill to-day, it will take up and discuss this measure and finish it; and I now give notice that I shall vote against any bill or appropriation for fortifications or for guns unless we are to have men to care for property for which we have already spent money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

PUBLIC PARK IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 6322) providing for the purchase of a reservation for a public park in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to purchase, for the purpose of providing a reservation for a public park, the several parcels of ground in the District of Columbia lying near the intersection of Branch avenue and Pennsylvania avenue SE., known as the Carpenter tract and the Pennsylvania Avenue Heights tract. For this purpose the bill appropriates $210,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, one-half of which shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF GEORGE W. SOULE.

The bill (S. 188) for the relief of the legal representatives of George W. Soule was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let it go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will lie over without prejudice.

DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY TRACKS TO UNION STATION.

The bill (S. 6147) authorizing changes in certain street-railway tracks within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill has been read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are certain committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, at the end of line 6, on page 1, it is proposed to insert:

With such northerly deviation as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of and adjacent to the main entrance to the Union Station.

So as to read:

That the City and Suburban Railway, of Washington, be, and it hereby is, authorized and required to construct a double-track extension of its lines from New Jersey avenue and G street NW. eastwardly to and along Massachusetts avenue with such northerly deviation as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of and adjacent to the main entrance to the Union Station to junctions with the existing tracks at Third and D streets NE. and at the northwest corner Stanton square, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I shall not interpose an objection to the consideration of this bill, but I do not like the habit the Senate has gotten into of late of having bills passed without being read at the time they are under consideration. I have noticed several times to-day that bills have been passed without having been read, simply upon the statement of the clerk or somebody else that the bill has heretofore been read. While we are considering bills subject to objection, they ought to be read in the hearing of the Senate for the purpose of receiving such objection, because no Senator can tell what the purpose or effect of a bill is if the bill is not read at the time.

I assume that this bill has been properly considered, and I shall not interpose an objection in this case, but I shall hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island desire to have the bill read?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say for the information of the Senate that the bill proposes to extend the existing street railway lines to the Union Station. It is a very important matter, and it was pretty freely discussed during the last session. I hope its passage will be facilitated, because that station will soon be ready to receive passengers. It necessitates the expenditure of about a million dollars on the part of the street railway companies of the District. They will get no benefit whatever from it. I hope no opposition whatever will develop to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Can the Senator from New Hampshire tell us how soon the Union Station will be finished?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think in about one year. In fact, it has been suggested that if they had had this accommodation, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad would probably have been depositing passengers there even as early as the present time. There are certain changes which the Baltimore and Ohio road will have to make in connection with their tracks, and if they can get street railway accommodations they will place their passengers in that station before it is fully completed.

The station will be completed, I will say to the Senator, within the limit of time allowed by law, which is February, 1908. It will be completed within that limit of time without a doubt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

Mr. BACON. Let the title of the bill be read, please.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6147) authorizing changes in certain street-railway tracks within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is the bill to which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] offered objection at a former session?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that it is, and will also say that the Senator from North Dakota is not going to offer objections to-day to the consideration or passage of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from North Dakota, I understand, made quite an elaborate report on the bill and displayed considerable interest at the time.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senator from North Dakota, I will say to the Senator from Montana, if he concludes that it is desirable will endeavor later on to get, separate from this bill, legislation covering the points that he made.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire another question. I understand the fact to be that certain accommodations were provided for at the junction of Fifteenth street and H street, or possibly Fifteenth street and the Avenue, with what is known as the "herdic line."

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. It contemplated an improvement of the service of the herdic line by substituting for the present ungainly busses running upon Fifteenth street, Massachusetts avenue, and Sixteenth street certain electrical wagons or busses. I was informed by some one representing the herdic company that the only obstacle in the way of a betterment of that service rested in the refusal of the street railway companies to exchange tickets; that unless a permanent system of exchange could be secured it would be impossible to secure the capital for the necessary betterments and improvements of that service.

I think it is a matter of common knowledge here that the service referred to—the herdic service—ought either to be abolished or improved. It is thoroughly undesirable as it is. The old busses are ungainly; the service is slow and unsatisfactory, and the people along the line have been in hopes for years that something would be done to insure the betterment of that particular transportation service. Now, does this bill provide for the exchange of tickets?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not, Mr. President; but I will say to the Senator that there has never been any trouble on that point. They have always had an exchange of tickets. They have never been refused that privilege notwithstanding the rattletrap conveyances they have. The railroad company exchanges tickets constantly with them without any objection from any source. And the railroad company tell me there never will be any trouble about that at all; that they are glad to exchange tickets.

Mr. CARTER. My understanding is, that while expressing a willingness to exchange the street car companies will not enter into any contract whereby exchanges will be made, and thus the herdic company is dependent upon their sweet will from day to day as to whether the exchanges will be allowed.

If any amendment should be offered here, I would insist that the amendment require a very radical improvement in the herdic service by the substitution for the present power of electric or some power other than the horses.

I am astonished that the Humane Society does not interpose an objection to the continuance of these busses, drawn by old crowbait horses, which we are compelled to see painfully laboring along the streets from day to day, hauling the busses after them.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is right about that. I fully sympathize with him as a humane man. That company has never been required to pay taxes. I do not know but that has been all right. It does not pay any taxes on its equipment as the railroad companies do.

Mr. CARTER. The horses certainly would not warrant any taxes.

Mr. GALLINGER. No. I can assure the Senator that, even if an amendment is not placed in this bill, there will be no trouble about that. I am sure that the corporations in this District as well as the citizens would welcome an improvement in that service. But how it will result in an improvement to put a provision in this bill compelling the railroad corporations to exchange tickets with them when they are doing it now and have done it for the last five, six, seven, or eight years, and without any complaint, surpasses my comprehension.

Mr. CARTER. I can not conceive that the desired amendment can be framed so as to become a part of this bill upon the spur of the moment, but I do hope the Committee on the District of Columbia will see to it that a bill is reported here or that an amendment to the District appropriation bill is presented which will fix a limit of time beyond which the herdics as at present conducted can not occupy the public streets as a means of public conveyance.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will prepare such a bill, I assure him that the committee will take it up.

Mr. CARTER. Furthermore, I think the railway companies should be compelled, in the same bill, to provide permanent exchanges when such motive power may be provided as the Commissioners of the District will approve as satisfactory.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire if there is anything in this bill that by any possibility would authorize the companies running these cars to make new locations upon streets which are not already occupied by the different companies?

Mr. GALLINGER. In answer to that, Mr. President, I will say that the bill does authorize some such extensions, they being absolutely necessary for the companies to reach the Union Station. The Senator is aware of the fact that the lines of neither of these railway companies go very close to the new Union Station. They were built to accommodate travel to and from the two existing railroad stations, and now it is proposed to compel them—they are not asking for this, but we are compelling them—to extend their lines to the new Union Station. We have very carefully examined the streets over which it will be necessary for them to go, and we are satisfied that the routes are designed to accommodate travel and to do injustice to nobody. The necessity exists for extending these lines along certain streets that are not now occupied by street railways.

Mr. HALE. I expected that answer. I suppose it is a necessity that the lines should be extended from where they now run for comparatively short spaces in order to reach the great station. But is there anything in the bill aside from that which authorizes any of these companies to change their existing routes or to add to them by occupying any streets except where it is necessary for the present lines to be extended to reach the station?

Mr. GALLINGER. Nothing whatever. I will say to the Senator there is no provision of that kind in the bill.

Mr. HALE. What is the longest space upon new streets that any company is authorized by this bill to occupy in order to reach the depot?

Mr. GALLINGER. Offhand I am unable to state that to the Senator; but the Capital Traction Company especially has to travel quite a little distance to cross to the station. The other company has got to extend its lines, I think, at two different points. The distance I can not give the Senator definitely. I will say to the Senator that a careful inquiry concerning this matter of persons who are supposed to know something about it reveals the fact that it will involve an expenditure of some nine or ten hundred thousand dollars on the part of these companies. That may be slightly excessive, but that is the information I gather.

Mr. HALE. Can the Senator tell us what extension is contemplated by this act for the Capital Traction Company—not perhaps in distance, but where does it apply?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Secretary will read the provision relating to the extension of the Capital Traction Company it will reveal what the Senator from Maine desires to have information concerning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. HALE. Before the Secretary begins I suppose the Senator, with his great knowledge, more than all of us possess on the subject, sees what I am after. I do not want to find afterwards that there has crept into this bill—I know it would not by consent of the Senator—any provision that allows any of these companies to parallel their lines and to make what is called "a new cross-town road."

Mr. GALLINGER. No; there is nothing whatever of that kind. On the contrary, these companies naturally want to build as short extensions as possible. There is no provision for a new railroad, I will state to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Nor for the occupation of any of the streets——

Mr. GALLINGER. Nothing whatever, except extensions on streets that are absolutely essential.

Mr. HALE. That it is so important to retain for general travel. Not many streets have been allowed to be left for general travel. The different street railroad companies in the city have grasped and gobbled up almost all of them, and there are only a few cross-town streets—K, L, M, N, and one or two others—that are left. I do not propose that any of these shall be confiscated further for railway purposes, so far as I am concerned, if I can prevent it.

Mr. CULLOM. And Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. HALE. And Massachusetts avenue, some part of which is already occupied. I am glad to have the assurance of the Senator that he has so carefully scrutinized the bill that under no circumstances can these companies claim that any of the aggressions to which I have alluded are justified and authorized by the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is assured on that point. I remember the fact that some of us did at one time advocate a cross-town line coming down M street. That has not only been abandoned by those who were promoting it outside, but it has been abandoned by the committee. There is nothing in this bill that could be objected to on that point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. MALLORY. Has the bill been read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was read, and the request was made that the Secretary should reread a certain portion of the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to hear the whole bill read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read again the bill.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in line with the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine, I desire to call attention to the fact that New Jersey avenue will be about the only unobstructed driveway leading from the new Union Station. That avenue extends northwesterly, and it is provided here that a double-track railway shall be constructed along New Jersey avenue from the circle at Massachusetts avenue a mile or more to the northwest in the center of New Jersey avenue. I should like very much to see that great avenue preserved, or some outlet at least preserved unobstructed by street-railway tracks for persons desiring to get to the station by some other line of conveyance. Massachusets avenue, extending northwest, is now obstructed by railway tracks. G street will likewise be obstructed.

Mr. HALE. It is now.

Mr. CARTER. It is now to an extent. The avenues to the south, as we know, are obstructed by street-railway tracks, and this bill provides that the only outlet on which a carriage can be driven from the new station, to wit, New Jersey avenue, in a northwesterly direction is to have a double street-railway track constructed through it up to Florida avenue, which it intersects, I think, a mile or more to the northwest. I do believe that avenue should be protected from this invasion.

It seems to me that it would be only proper to require these railroad companies to run out Massachusetts avenue on existing tracks two or three blocks and then to run directly north on some of the unoccupied streets, if need be. But the question raised by the Senator from Maine leads to a comment upon exactly what this bill provides for, and it provides in this particular for just what the Senator from Maine desires to avoid.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire why is this extension of New Jersey avenue sought by the railroad companies. My impression, when I first had my attention called to the bill—and that was while I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia—was that they simply wished to connect the Union Depot with their present lines and not to build any additional lines taking up any streets of the city that had not heretofore been occupied by their tracks.

Now, from what the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] says it appears that there is incorporated in the bill a purpose to take up the only broad thoroughfare that is left leading from the Union Depot to the northwest and to block it by a set of double tracks. I do not think that that matter has been thoroughly understood, and unless there is some good reason shown why that provision of the bill should stand I would oppose it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the reason is that there is a railroad terminus at Seventh street and Florida avenue, and the people reaching that point desiring to get to the Union Station in a direct line would necessarily have to be accommodated in this way. That is the reason for it. It may not be an adequate reason, but that is the only reason I can give the Senator. If this extension is not authorized they will be compelled to go long distances out of their way to reach the Union Station.

I will suggest further, Mr. President, that if the company should be denied the privilege of laying a track on New Jersey avenue there will be the usual disturbance on the part of the residents on any narrow street that it may be proposed to occupy. Senators know what that means. The Committee on the District of Columbia certainly understands what it means, and have been obstructed at almost every point in attempting to get necessary accommodations to the people of the District of Columbia by protests from citizens along the narrow streets where it has been attempted to lay a railroad track.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be stated.

The first amendment was, in section 1, after the word "avenue," at the end of line 6, page 1, to insert:

With such northerly deviation as may be necessary to bring the tracks immediately in front of, and adjacent to, the main entrance to the Union Station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 14, after the word "authorized," to insert:

Also a double-track loop on the Union Station plaza connecting with the four tracks provided for in section 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 22, after the words "Union Station," to strike out "thence across said plaza to Massachusetts avenue" and insert:

Together with a double-track loop passing in front of the station on said plaza.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 5, after the word "avenue," to insert:

Also a double-track extension for connecting its lines from First and B streets NE. southerly along First street to B street SE.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I disclaim familiarity with this bill, but I so heartily agree with the proposition of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that I think it is well for the judgment of the Senate to be invoked on the question of granting street-extension privileges to the railroads in order to let them into the Union Station.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is correct in saying that this bill does not authorize any street-railway extension except in connection with the Union Station; but, Mr. President, if you will read the lines from line 25, on page 2, to line 8, on page 3, you will find that this is about the largest street-extension privilege given to the railway corporations in the District in a decade. It connects of course with the Union Station precisely as a mile of railroad out in California connect with the railroad in New York by having switches put in.

I do think that in order to get more mature consideration of this subject the amendment just read should be disagreed to. If that be the view of the Senate (and I think that view is founded on good sound public policy), at the proper time I shall move to strike out all after the word "avenue" in line 25 to and including the word "avenue" in line 5, page 3, so as to actually cut out of the bill these extensive privileges not necessary to reach the Union Station.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw any further consideration of this bill to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to say a word before the bill is laid over. This bill has had the most careful consideration of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and particularly of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, who is one of the most careful and conscientious officials that any municipality ever had; and the committee have given a great deal of thought and time to the subject. They believe it is a public necessity; but if for any reason the Senate of the United States thinks otherwise, and it is deemed desirable that we shall have a Union Station and not have adequate means of reaching it, it makes quite as little difference to me as it possibly can to any other Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over without prejudice. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

INSPECTION OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

The bill (S. 5945) providing for an inspection of certain agricultural products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is a bill of very vast comprehension, and I think it had better go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Maine.

AUTHORITY OVER INSURANCE BUSINESS.

The next business in order was the resolution introduced by Mr. CULBERSON, directing the Judiciary Committee to consider and report to the Senate whether Congress has authority under the Constitution to supervise and regulate business of marine, fire, or life insurance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. When was that resolution introduced, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was introduced December 6, 1905, and reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on June 25, 1906.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, a written report was submitted from the Judiciary Committee expressing the opinion that Congress possessed no such power, and informing the Senate that the views of the committee would be later more fully presented. So I think the resolution had better go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

PANAMA RAILROAD.

The bill (S. 6539) to control the direction and management of the Panama Railroad was announced as next in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice, and give notice that at a very early day, on the reassembling of Congress after the holidays, I will call it up and ask the Senate to take action upon it, merely remarking now, if the Senate will permit me, that the legislation of Congress is more needed in the enactment of this bill or some bill of that kind than it is needed on any other subject in regard to the Panama Canal, both for the purpose of saving the credit and honor of the Government and saving vast unnecessary expenditures in the construction of the canal, and for the express purpose of getting within the control and direction of the Canal Commission all the facilities that the Government may exercise in connection with canal construction, so that there shall be no hang-on of any other corporation or any other power which hitherto has been and at present is a dead drag on the canal construction and has been cause of waste, if not other worse dispositions, of large sums of money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Alabama, the bill will go over without prejudice.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The next business in order was an amendment reported by Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Rules, relating to points of order on new matter that may be included in conference reports, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment to the rules will lie over.

HOT SPRINGS MOUNTAIN RESERVATION, ARK.

The bill (S. 6498) to amend an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon United States commissioners over offenses committed in a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, Ark.," approved April 20, 1904, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 6 of the act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon United States commissioners over offenses committed in a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, Ark.," approved April 20, 1904, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 6. That any United States commissioner, duly appointed by the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Arkansas, and residing in said district, shall have power and jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any and all violations of this act, or of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, referred to therein. That such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn complaint, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with the doing, otherwise than in compliance with the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, of any act with reference to the matters which the Secretary of the Interior in section 4 of this act is authorized to regulate, or in violation of such rules and regulations, or in violation of any provision of this act, or with any misdemeanor or other like offense the punishment provided for which does not exceed a fine of $100, to try the person thus charged, and if found guilty, to impose the penalty prescribed. In all cases of conviction an appeal shall lie from the judgment of any such commissioner to the United States district court for the eastern district of Arkansas. The said United States district court shall prescribe rules of procedure and practice for such commissioners in the trial of cases and with reference to said appeals.

Section 2 proposes to amend section 7 of the act by striking out the words "said commissioner," in the first line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "any such commissioner."

Mr. BERRY. From what committee does that bill come?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee as to whether or not it was the intention of the committee and thought by them to be proper for Congress to provide that rules or regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior should have the force and effect of law to the extent that a criminal prosecution should be based upon them?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho is that this is not an original proposition. It is simply an amendment of existing law in force in that reservation, so as to confer jurisdiction upon a United States commissioner to act in certain cases of violation of the law. The old law does not, as a matter of fact, designate the commissioner. This is a reenactment of the old law, except the old law says that "said commissioner shall have power," etc., to do certain acts, but that was the first mention of the commissioner in the old act. The amendment proposed by the present bill defines the commissioner and confers jurisdiction upon any commissioner of the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Arkansas.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think a bad practice has grown up in conferring legislative powers upon the Secretary of the Interior through the making of rules and regulations that shall have the force and effect of law, in that a criminal prosecution may be based upon their violation. The commissioner should have power to enforce laws, he being to a certain extent a judicial officer. That is correct and consistent with the system of our Government; but this proposition is not so at all. The practice should be abolished; that is to say, it should no longer be countenanced or recognized as one of the functions of an executive or administrative officer of the Government to enact criminal statutes. It is a dangerous power to place in their hands.

I notice that this amendment places the rules and regulations of the commissioner upon exactly the same footing as a criminal statute enacted by Congress. It is a bad precedent. The precedent has been established; it exists; but it ought not to exist. Those rules and regulations ought not to have the force and effect of a criminal statute. They can be enforced through the commissioner, but a law can be enacted covering the whole subject, and that law can be enforced, the initiative being taken through the commissioner, and the crime of a party charged with violating the law can be punished the same as any other crime.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As a general proposition I am entirely in accord with the Senator from Idaho; but the Senator will understand that in this particular case under the circumstances it would be absolutely impossible for Congress to enter into all the details of the management of the Hot Springs reservation.

Years ago we passed a statute in regard to the Yellowstone National Park reserve, giving the United States commissioner there authority to execute the laws as regards certain misdemeanors. The regulations were made by the Secretary of the Interior. In that particular instance they have worked remarkably well, and the reservation has been well governed.

In many respects the Hot Springs reservation might be in the same class. There are one hundred and one infractions of law and order there the punishment for which can not possibly be provided for in a legislative enactment. The reservation is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and he is given authority to make certain rules and regulations.

The question does not come up for the first time in this bill. The authority is given in the old act of 1894. This is simply a statute which, instead of saying "said commissioner," provides that "any such commissioner" shall act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming what powers are given by this bill that were not given in the original act?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think any.

Mr. BERRY. Then what is the difficulty? Have the courts decided that there was something in the former act which Congress was not authorized to enact?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all. Authority was given, as stated, in section 4, prescribing the official who was to administer this law. It says in section 4 that "said commissioner shall have power," etc. Evidently the person who drew the law omitted in the former part of it to insert the words "United States commissioner for the eastern district of Arkansas." The object of this bill is to cure that defect.

Mr. BERRY. Do I understand that there are no additional powers or authority given by this bill that are not contained in the original law?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not so far as I know, and none so far as indicated by letters received from the Department of the Interior regarding the bill.

Mr. BERRY. It only gives power to the United States commissioner on the reservation as to offenses committed there?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is all.

Mr. BERRY. I never heard of the bill before.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. A law has been in operation for two or three years, but it has the defect which it is proposed to cure by this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION AND MILITARY-RECORD BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as some Senators desire a brief executive session this afternoon, and as it is now nearly 4 o'clock, I should like to ask unanimous consent at this time that to-morrow morning, after the routine morning business, the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills and bills to correct military records on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills and bills to correct military records. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota how long that will take?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think in the neighborhood of an hour and a half or two hours—probably not more than an hour and a half. I think we shall certainly be through with the bills referred to before 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 19, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 18, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by Rev. Dr. M. L. LEVY, of San Francisco.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION AS MEMBER OF COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON THE TERRITORIES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1906.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives United States.

DEAR SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the Territories, to take effect at once.

Very truly, JOHN A. MOON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, Mr. MOON will be relieved from service on the Committee on the Territories.

There was no objection.

POSTAL FRAUD ORDERS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 16548 and the report thereon, the bill providing for a judicial review of fraud orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SHOSHONE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21202) fixing the time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on the same, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead entrymen on lands formerly embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation, in Wyoming, which were opened to entry under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1905, shall have six months after the date of filing upon their lands, or until May 15, 1907, to establish residence upon the lands entered by them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming why this time needs to be extended. The other day we passed a similar bill, and now we are asked to pass a bill of similar import. Is the fault the fault of Congress in enacting legislation or the fault of the administrative branch of the Government administering the law?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not anyone's fault. It is a condition. These lands were opened to entry on the 15th of August. Under the homestead law and regulations the homestead entrymen must establish residence within six months of the date of entry. The expiration of the six months occurs on the 15th of February, midwinter. This is a region in which it was impossible for the settlers when they first made entry to establish their homes and the intent of the legislation is to give them until May 15, a reasonable time in the spring, within which to build their houses to establish themselves permanently upon their lands.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, but here is a law which requires that the entrymen shall enter upon the land within six months of the entry, as I understand it.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and a wise law it is.

Mr. MANN. Thereupon the administrative branch of the Government fixes it so that entries shall be filed in August, making it impossible for most people who desire to enter upon the land to comply with the provisions of the law and enter upon it in midwinter, thereby giving a species of favoritism to certain people who may be able to make entries and trust to some Member of Congress or to the mercy of Congress itself to give him a special privilege and extension of time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman unintentionally misstates the case. The provisions of the homestead law and the decisions under it which make it necessary that settlers shall establish residence upon their entry within six months are wise, but in opening Indian reservations to entry the time when filings may be made is set by the Congress with a view of accommodating intending settlers from all parts of the Union. In this particular case it was first provided by law that the first entries should be made on the 15th of June, but the railways building to that region, over which intending settlers from Illinois and Iowa and elsewhere must travel going to the reservations, were unable to complete their extensions into the region, and it became necessary, in order to make it possible for intending settlers from all over the country to reach the region, to delay the date of entry two months, and settlers from all the Union were given an equal opportunity to participate in the drawing, and then, if they were fortunate enough to secure a low number, to make a filing, which many of them did.

But it occurred that this delay brought the six months in midwinter. Now, surely no harm is done by giving all of those settlers who made their entries under the law until the springtime within which to establish their residence on the desert lands, where, until they have constructed their canals, it is impossible for them to grow crops.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I am informed, I do not know how reliably, various people who would have entered upon this land did not complete the filing of their papers for the very reason that under the law they would be required to enter upon the actual physical possession of the land in midwinter. It seems to me everybody ought to be on the same plane.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if there was any qualified entryman who failed to file on his land for that reason, I never heard of him. It has been the practice of Congress for years, known of all men everywhere, and particularly to men who go to openings of Indian reservations——

Mr. MANN. Particularly to men from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. That this body always extends the time where the expiration of the six months falls in midwinter. It has been done in a multitude of cases. It has been done on every Indian reservation that I know of where that condition has existed for years past.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman it may be known to all men, but there is at least one man who did not know it, and, on the contrary, when I was asked by some people of my city in reference to it, I did not know there was any such custom or regulation, and so informed them.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not suppose there was any such ignorant individual as that in the State of Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not know the State of Illinois harbored an individual so ignorant of the usual action of Congress in such cases.

Mr. MANN. The State of Illinois does. We appreciate in the State of Illinois that all wisdom lies in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to state for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois that the law does not provide that a homestead settler has six months within which to establish a residence, but the law has been construed that if a settler establishes a residence within six months he is within the law; but the law itself does not state that after an entryman makes his entry he has six months within which to establish a residence thereon, but the prevailing opinion of the people generally in the country is, the law having been so administered, that they have in fact six months to establish their residence.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks of the prevailing opinion. That is what I am complaining of. It is knowledge which the people of some particular States have which is not shared by the people of the rest of the country.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, personally I have never advocated any legislation granting an extension of time to homestead settlers that fail to establish their residence within six months, but it is a fact that since I have been in Congress bills similar to this have been passed, and only the other day we passed one, I believe, for the Crow Reservation, in Montana, exactly on the same basis on which this stands, and a similar bill was passed affecting the Rosebud settlers, of South Dakota, and one affecting the settlers in the Devils Lake Reservation, in South Dakota, in the last Congress, and, as the gentleman from Wyoming has stated, we have established a precedent for extending the time until spring where an opening occurred so late in the season that the six months expired in the winter months. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING. Has it ever occurred that acts have been passed extending the time for persons entering other lands than Indian reservations? Why can not it apply to all settlers? I know a dozen persons in my county who went to South Dakota last July or August and entered land and have been trying to get an extension through the Department of the Interior, and can not, of course, under the law. Why can not a law of this kind be applied to persons on other lands?

Mr. MONDELL. Let me answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is no reason that I know of why it can not be done if it is done in one case.

Mr. STERLING. Has it ever been done in any case except on Indian reservations?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not to my knowledge; but the conditions are somewhat different. These reservation lands are being sold for the benefit of the Indians, and in many instances the price paid for the land is considerable, whereas under the general land laws the homestead settlers can get title to their land simply by residence and improvement and are not required to pay anything if they comply with the law as to improvement and residence.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say to the gentleman that there is another and altogether more important difference; that in the case of the gentleman my friend refers to they could have filed upon their lands at any time; they could have title in May or July as well as in August; but these men could not make a filing until the 15th day of August, and they must make a filing by the 15th day of August or else not secure their lands at all.

Mr. STERLING. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman know of any instances where time has been extended other than on Indian reservations that have been sold?

Mr. MONDELL. It has been customary to extend the time wherever public lands were opened—and, of course, the opening of public lands means generally the opening of Indian lands—wherever the opening of public lands occurs at a given date and the expiration of the six months from that day occurs in midwinter, giving the settler until the spring within which to establish his residence upon his land; and that has been the almost uniform practice of the House. It has occurred in many, many instances.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. The date of the opening of these lands is fixed in the original act, I suppose?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. So it would be entirely competent for Congress to take into consideration when the original act was passed and fix the date, so that they would not have to take up these entries and hold them during the winter months. For instance, we might have made the date on the 1st of May next, instead of making it last August, and then the necessity for this legislation would be entirely obviated. May I ask the gentleman—he has had more or less to do with this class of legislation—why the committee, and he, as the originator of the bill, have not before this seen to it that the date was fixed in the spring for the opening, in order to facilitate the settlers in acquiring these lands?

Mr. MONDELL. I said a moment ago that in the original bill, which I had the honor to introduce, this opening was provided for on the 15th of June, which would give the entryman some four or five months before the oncoming of winter in which to build his house; but owing to the fact that railways building to the reservation were delayed in construction, so that intending settlers could not reach the regions the 15th of June, Congress extended the time until the 15th of August, at which time the railroads will reach that region.

Mr. PAYNE. I think we carry the doctrine that everybody understands what the law is to a pretty extreme limit. A bill was beaten in the House yesterday because it was alleged an alien ought to know more than the court did about our laws in regard to naturalization. That was the principal argument made against the bill. Now, you come in with this extreme argument to-day that these people not only know what the law is, but know what it is to be; that Congress has had a uniform habit of extending the time whenever the time expired during the winter months, and that, therefore, they have relied upon this habit of Congress and have been negligent about putting up houses, which, I suppose, it takes a week to construct on those reservations, and for this reason these bills ought to pass. I have not objected to these bills before, and I am not going to object to-day, but it seems to me we have reached the extreme limit of where we ought to presume that the people not only know what the law is, but what the law is to be.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how long a request for unanimous consent is entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. Until somebody demands the regular order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question. Why is it necessary to present this bill? Is it not a fact that you can apply to the Secretary of the Interior and have this law extended, as he has done in the Oklahoma Indian pasture case?

Mr. MONDELL. That is not possible.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Your bill is the same kind of a bill and on all fours with the act opening the Kiowa and Comanche Indian Reservation, in Oklahoma, which act provided that the Secretary of the Interior should dispose of these lands before the 6th day of December. He has refused to obey this law, and by some Executive order he has, I understand, extended the time until April next. There was no authority under that act for the Secretary to extend the time beyond December 6, and I do not see why he can not, by issuing a similar order, extend the time in the case covered by your bill.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I have just received a reply to a letter of a constituent who wanted to go on this land. I had a letter from the Commissioner, who stated that it could not be done, and that he must get out before the 15th of February.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is a very remarkable proposition—that the Secretary of the Interior can do away with the law—as suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is no question about the correctness of my statement. The law required the sale of these Indian pasture lands to be made before December 6, and they were not made, and he has extended the time specified by Congress, I understand, until April next. He has also withdrawn about 4,000,000 acres from allotment in the Choctaw Nation—land belonging to the Choctaws—and has refused to carry out an act of Congress requiring him to allot these lands; and if he has refused in these two instances to carry out an act of Congress, why does not the gentleman apply to the Secretary of the Interior for relief, and not to Congress?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming, now, you know we have in our committee hearings about the coal and timber lands, showing that there has been a great deal of fever in trying to steal lands, and trying to run off with them; and I earnestly ask the gentleman whether or not this statute will cover any coal lands and would extend to or interfere at all with the timber lands, which, under the policy of the President, we are trying to protect in the future?

Mr. MONDELL. I have never heard anyone suggest that this covers any timber or coal lands.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you know anything about it?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not. This is the usual legislation, time and time again passed, referring to homestead settlers in the western wilderness who are not able to construct their homes in midwinter.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that some of the 4,000,000 acres of Choctaw Indian lands that have been withdrawn from allotment in the Indian Territory are pine timber and coal lands?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know. These are lands in Wyoming.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman know that these Choctaw lands that have been withdrawn are being sought by the railroad, coal, lumber, and oil trusts?

Mr. MONDELL. I know nothing about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman, has the Secretary of the Interior asked for this?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the Secretary has asked for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What has he done?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think he has done anything.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has his opinion been asked?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

EXTENSION OF TWENTY-THIRD STREET NW. TO KALORAMA ROAD.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for present consideration of the Senate bill 133; and, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the substitute instead of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 133) authorizing the extension of Twenty-third street NW. to Kalorama road.

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Twenty-third street NW. from U street to Kalorama road, so as to include so much of lots 9 and 24, L. R. Tuttle's subdivision, and lots 1 and 18, block 20, Kalorama Heights subdivision, as lie between two parallel curved lines 50 feet apart, the easterly of which begins at a point on north line of lot 9, L. R. Tuttle's subdivision, and 50 feet easterly from the northwest corner thereof, and which passes thence in a southeasterly direction on a circular arc with a radius of 512 feet, more or less, to a point on the west line of lot 24 of said subdivision, and 55 feet, more or less, from the southwestern corner of said lot.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits, as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this bill provides for connection between Kalorama avenue and Twenty-third street.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does it make any expense on the District?

Mr. BABCOCK. It does not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that on District day this bill is in order. Without a full examination of the precedents, the Chair will hold that the bill can be called up on District day.

Mr. BABCOCK. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the opening of this short street does not require the expenditure of a single penny of the District or the United States' money. It is to be paid for entirely by the property benefited, and the entire amount is to be assessed as benefits.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I notice that the third section appropriates $600 to pay the expenses of condemnation of this land, but it is to be paid out of the District revenues.

Mr. BABCOCK. But that is to be assessed on the property benefited in that particular section.

Mr. PAYNE. It is to be collected back afterwards. I did not raise the point that it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, because it was appropriated from the District revenues and not from the money of the United States, and it might therefore be properly on the House Calendar; but there is an appropriation out of the District revenues of $600 in the first instance.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from New York that all street-opening bills carry an appropriation for condemnation proceedings, and it carries an appropriation for payment of damages, but this is assessed upon the property and paid for in equal annual payments. If there be no further questions, I will ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken; and the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the House that this seems to be a new departure on the part of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the form of the bill, which I am very glad to see.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, it is comparatively new. The original bill was drawn in a different manner.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. This proposes that the condemnation proceedings shall determine the amount to be paid for the land condemned, and also the expenses of those proceedings in addition are to be assessed upon the property. If I was allowed to criticise the action of so great a committee as that on the District of Columbia, I would say that the provisions are clumsily expressed, but I think they carry out that object. I think if the gentleman had gone to the statutes of some of the States—for instance, the State of New York—he would have found a little better method. There we provide that the condemnation shall first take place by a jury, but the jury do not fix the amount of the assessment afterwards. The jury ascertain the amount and the costs of the condemnation and then find that the amount shall be assessed upon the property according to the benefits, ratably, but the whole amount is assessed by the assessors of the municipality, so that there are two separate tribunals—one to fix the amount of the damages and another to fix the pro rata assessment of damages upon the property. I only throw this out as a suggestion to this committee, that in the future, perhaps, they may get a system that shall be a little more clearly expressed than it seems to be in this bill. I commend the object of the bill, and I think that it will work out all right in the end; but I think it would be better if we separated these tribunals.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from New York that these bills which will be presented to the House this morning have been delayed for more than one year, awaiting the action of Congress and a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, upon which a distinguished gentleman from New York served. He thought, and that committee thought, that they improved on the New York plan, instead of having two tribunals, in only having one and closing it all up. Now, this Congress passed a law which provides for the opening of all streets. Our street-opening bills are very short now, except where there are unusual conditions. The law provides that the assessments shall be made for damages and benefits, and if the benefits are not sufficient, then the difference shall be paid by the District of Columbia; but these bills that we are reporting this morning provide that the property benefited must pay all, for the reason that the property owners interested and the Commissioners have all agreed to it. They say, "Open this street and we will pay all the expenses. All we ask is authority from Congress to do it."

Mr. PAYNE. Then this is a new departure.

Mr. BABCOCK. We passed one bill at the last session.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman to say it was not a new departure.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no. We passed a bill under the present statute at the last session.

Mr. PAYNE. Only one bill; so that it is a new departure.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman may term it so.

Mr. PAYNE. I am very glad to see that, but I hope the committee will reconsider the form of their bill in connection with the New York law, and notwithstanding the distinguished character of the committee and their judgment, I think that they could largely improve upon it if they would still further study the law of New York or of some other State—because the laws of the States are generally similar upon these subjects—and separate these tribunals, and let the damages first be assessed and afterwards the tax be laid upon the premises.

Mr. BABCOCK. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that it is the New York idea to have as many tribunals as possible. In Congress here we try to simplify it and boil it down to one. Instead of a six or eight page bill, we do it all on one page.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that in New York, after there is an award of damages, we do not hear so much complaint about people getting together and putting up the damages as we do in the District of Columbia, especially where the Government tries to condemn a site for a public building. We do not have so much scandal about the amount of the award and about the people standing by each other in order to mulct the Government in an undue amount of damages. I commend to the gentleman a review of this subject in connection with the practice of the State of New York, or some other State that has a similar excellent statute upon this subject.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that section 2 contains a proviso—

That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

There is a limitation upon a jury called to assess certain sums that are to be paid by an adjacent owner. I want to ask the gentleman if that matter has received the attention of the committee as to whether or not it is competent for Congress to impose a limitation of that kind? Here is a jury called to assess damages, and the further duty is imposed upon them to provide for the expenses, and the method selected is to impose a burden on the adjacent owners equal to the value of this land that is to be assessed.

Now, I commend the committee for its efforts in this direction. I think it is a great improvement on the old method. I have no doubt but that the beneficiaries, the men who are to be benefited by opening up the new territory, ought to pay the expenses, but I want to know if the committee has considered this question as to power. It looks to me to be important.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that Congress has passed a great number of bills with this same proviso, that all the cost shall be assessed to the property benefited. The courts have never set it aside, and I should think that that was the best answer that could be given the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has there been any litigation about the matter?

Mr. BABCOCK. For years there has been litigation about street-opening matters, and they were constantly set aside until Congress perfected these measures. But this is one provision that has not been set aside.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no doubt about its being competent for Congress to say that a street shall not be opened until all the expenses have been paid, but here is a new departure, as far as I understand it, as to the method of raising that fund.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; this section is not a new departure.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that I have seen any legislation of that kind with that limitation on the tribunal.

Mr. BABCOCK. In every bill passed there has been a provision that the amount awarded as damages should be paid for either one-half by the Government and one-half by the District, or at least one-half assessed as benefits and the balance paid by the District, or the whole to be borne by the property benefited. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WIDENING BLADENSBURG ROAD.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 55) for the widening of Bladensburg road, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read instead of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read instead of the original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the dedication to the District of Columbia of two-thirds of the land necessary for the widening of the Bladensburg road in the District of Columbia from H or Boundary street to the District of Columbia line, according to the street-extension plans of said District, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to complete the widening of said road to a width of 90 feet between the limits named.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the Code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF GENESEO PLACE AND SUMMIT PLACE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5246) to provide for the extension of Geneseo place and Summit place, District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read instead of the original.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read instead of the original. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within ninety days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Geneseo place, Lanier Heights NW., in said District, in a southwesterly direction in prolongation of its present lines and to extend Summit place in an easterly direction with a width of 40 feet to connect with said extension of Geneseo place, said extension of Summit place to be north of the northerly line of lot 198 of Lanier Heights and said line extended, the name of Geneseo place to be changed to Summit place.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the Code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF W AND ADAMS STREETS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 5119) authorizing the extension of W and Adams streets NW., and I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read instead of the original.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in place of the original. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of W and Adams streets NW. east to North Capitol street, W street to be 80 feet and Adams street to be 90 feet wide.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected; and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act (S. 7040) to provide for the erection of a District of Columbia building and an appropriate exhibit therein at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, and for other purposes; and

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 7040. An act to provide for the erection of a District of Columbia building and an appropriate exhibit therein at the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. R. 76. Joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF PROSPECT STREET NW.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask the present consideration of the bill H. R. 7039, and ask that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7039) authorizing the extension of Prospect street NW.

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Prospect street from Thirty-eighth street to the Canal road, with a width of 60 feet.

SEC. 2. That the assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits, as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF KENYON STREET NW.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10843, and ask that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10843) authorizing the extension of Kenyon street NW.

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Kenyon street from Seventeenth street to Mount Pleasant street, to include all of lot 90 of Denison & Leighton's subdivision, and so much of lot 1, Ingleside, as lies south of the north line of lot 90 of Denison & Leighton's subdivision extended westward to Seventeenth street.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FOURTH STREET NE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14900, and ask that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14900) to extend Fourth, Sixth, and other streets northeast.

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and inaccordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Fourth street NE. northward from its present termination near Franklin street extended, through the Frederick Rose tract to Hamlin street extended.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits: And provided further, That the jury, in their assessments of damages and benefits, shall consider the circumstances and conditions under which an alleged dedication was made through what was known as the Frederick Rose property, being parts of lots 8 and 9, Metropolis View, and shall further consider the fact that certain improvements were made by the District of Columbia because of the alleged dedication through said property, and shall also consider the benefits to said property by reason of said improvements.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected; and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "To extend Fourth street NE."

EXTENSION OF MONROE STREET NE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10703, and ask that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10703) authorizing the extension of Monroe street NE.

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to extend, with a width of 90 feet, Monroe street NE., from Seventh street NE. to Michigan avenue, formerly the Bunker Hill road.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits, and, as condemnation of the said extension is for the purpose of eliminating grade crossings in this section upon a practicable grade, the jury is hereby directed to consider such plan in the assessment of benefits for this extension.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF T STREET NW.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5971, and ask that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5971) authorizing the extension of T street (formerly W street) NW.

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of T street from Thirty-fifth street to Wisconsin avenue, formerly High or Thirty-second street west, with a width of 60 feet.

SEC. 2. That assessment shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF SEVENTEENTH STREET NW.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 121, and I ask that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 121) authorizing the extension of Seventeenth street NW.

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the pasage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Seventeenth street from Kenyon street to Irving street, with a width of 90 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF HARVARD STREET, COLUMBIA HEIGHTS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14815, and ask that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14815) for the extension of Harvard street, Columbia Heights, District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Harvard street, Columbia Heights, in a straight line, with a width of 60 feet, more or less, to Sixteenth street NW., upon such lines as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem most advantageous to the abutting property.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits, as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HIGHWAY BETWEEN WATER SIDE DRIVE AND PARK ROAD.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill H. R. 128, and I ask that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the substitute may be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 128) for the opening of a connecting highway between Water Side drive and Park road, District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for connecting the north end of Water Side drive, in Kalorama Heights, just above Q street, with the south end of Park road, in Belair Heights, by a highway 60 feet wide, all in accordance with plans on file in the office of the Engineer Commissioner, District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the Code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WIDENING COLUMBIA ROAD EAST OF SIXTEENTH STREET.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 68) for the widening of a section of Columbia road east of Sixteenth street, and ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] calls up the bill S. 68, and asks for the reading of the substitute in lieu of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491 a to 491 n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to widen Columbia road between the east side of Sixteenth street extended and the western limit of the subdivision of the north grounds of Columbia College to a total width of 60 feet, concentric with the present improved roadway on such street.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits, as contemplated in section 491 g of the subchapter of the Code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That at least one-half of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman why it is that in this bill, differing from all of the others, the proviso of section 2 reads:

That at least one-half of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

Mr. BABCOCK. Because this small piece of road is a public improvement more than a private one, as the other cases were.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken; and the substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Commissioners be printed in the RECORD in connection with this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want the report and letter.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the printing of the report and the letter referred to?

There was no objection.

The report, including the letter, is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 68) for the widening of a section of Columbia road east of Sixteenth street, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to widen Columbia road between the east side of Sixteenth street extended and the western limit of the subdivision of the north grounds of Columbia College to a total width of 60 feet, concentric with the present improved roadway on such street.

"SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits, as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That at least one-half of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

"SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The amendment recommended by your committee, in the nature of a substitute for the Senate bill, is for the purpose of bringing the proposed legislation in harmony with sections 491a to 491n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, these sections regulating the proceedings for the condemnation of land for streets.

Provision has been made in section 2 of the substitute recommended by your committee so that at least one-half of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages, together with the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings, shall be assessed as benefits on adjacent property that will derive an advantage from this improvement. It is believed that the general public is as much interested in the widening of Columbia road as the immediate property holders; hence the above provision.

This measure was prepared by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and introduced at their request, as will be seen by the following letter, in which the necessity for this improvement is fully explained:

"OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"Washington, November 22, 1905.

"DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to forward herewith a bill for the widening of a section of Columbia road east of Sixteenth street, also a plat showing in red the proposed widening, with the recommendation that the bill be enacted.

"The bill was introduced at the last session of Congress as H. R. 18328, but failed of passage. It was not initiated by the Commissioners, but they made a favorable report thereon. The Commissioners believe, however, that the matter is one of such wide public interest that it should be passed at as early a date as practicable.

"At present Columbia road between the limits of the proposed widening, a distance of about 450 feet, is but 33 feet wide. The portion of the road east of these limits is 60 feet wide, and the portion west is 100 feet wide. The present roadway along the portion proposed to be widened is paved with a width of 30 feet, but what sidewalk exists there is almost entirely on private property. Columbia road is an important highway, and the benefits to be derived from the proposed extension are of a public nature as well as an improvement to the surrounding property. The estimated cost of the widening is $14,000. The bill provides that at least one half of the amount of damages awarded shall be assessed as benefits on the adjacent property and the other half to be borne as general taxation. The reason for this provision is, as stated, that the public is as much interested in the extension as the immediate property owners.

"Very respectfully, HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
"President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

"Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
"Chairman of Committee on District of Columbia,
"United States Senate."

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 20178) in relation to the Washington Market Company.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] asks for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 20178, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington Market Company be, and hereby is, authorized, in connection with the refrigeration of produce stored or sold at Center Market, to manufacture ice at any suitable place within the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have some explanation of this bill, which seems rather remarkable on its face.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would be very glad to hear from, and will yield to, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH], who reported the bill.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. I would like to know, first, if the gentleman will permit me to make an inquiry, something about the Washington Market Company; and, secondly, why they should be given an extension of their franchise without any special reason for it, so far as we know; and, third, why should they be permitted to manufacture ice in any place they please in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The Washington Market Company was organized for the purpose of carrying on a general market business, and in the articles of incorporation, when they were incorporated, in 1870, there was some doubt about their having the power to incorporate away from their present location of business; and, thirdly, I see no reason why they should not have this right, as I think everybody will be pleased to have them do it and make ice cheaper, if possible.

Mr. MANN. The answer that it had been incorporated in 1870 is hardly satisfactory to me, at least.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I said they were incorporated to carry on a general market business. They are located here at the Center Market, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. It is a private corporation run for profit?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I expect so.

Mr. MANN. With a market upon ground that belongs to the public?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I understand so.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it proper that Congress should be informed as to the conditions of the business, and so forth, when they want an extension of franchise?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does the gentleman mean by that that Congress should be informed about how much dividend they are paying?

Mr. MANN. I think we are entitled to know, if they are occupying our property and want an extension of authority—a corporation that is semipublic—something with reference to the business.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I am frank to say to the gentleman that I do not know what dividends they are paying.

Mr. MANN. I remember that the gentleman has been very much opposed at times to some of the semipublic corporations having extensions unless we should know what dividends they were paying or what profits they were making. Does anybody know in reference to the business of this company, which is using public property and which now wants an extension of its power?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I could not inform the gentleman myself as to what dividends they are paying.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I will read the bill, which provides:

That the Washington Market Company be, and hereby is, authorized, in connection with the refrigeration of produce stored or sold at Center Market, to manufacture ice at any suitable place in the District of Columbia.

Now, they need more ice. They can not make enough in their refrigerating plant to take care of the increase of business of that company, and the question has arisen, under their charter, whether they can go across the street and make ice without authority from Congress. That is all there is in it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that under this bill they can go across the street and manufacture ice?

Mr. BABCOCK. It says in the bill that they can manufacture ice in connection with the refrigeration of produce stores sold at that market.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the purpose is to manufacture ice—not to manufacture ice in connection with the refrigeration of produce stored at the Center Market, because they can not manufacture ice in connection with refrigerated produce stored in the market.

Mr. BABCOCK. Anybody has the right to manufacture ice. The gentleman from Illinois has the same right as any American citizen to buy a lot in the District of Columbia and go to freezing water if he so desires, and there is nothing to prevent it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether there is anything in the statute preventing anybody from manufacturing ice in the District or not, but I know if it is the law the gentleman ought to bring in a bill to change it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Of course they would be subject to the police regulations made by the Commissioners as to the particular location of their plant.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The statute overrides the police regulations. This wipes out of existence the police regulations, and that is the very reason objection is raised to it. Other people can not manufacture ice any place in the District they please; but under this bill the Washington Market Company, having already received favor, being in use of public property, obtains permission to do what nobody else can do—manufacture ice in any place it pleases in the District of Columbia without any limitation as to place or time.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this specifically gives them special authority to put up a plant, but they still remain under the police regulations.

Mr. MANN. This does not simply apply to the building of a plant to manufacture ice, but it is at any suitable place in the District of Columbia. I say it overrides the police regulations in the manufacture of ice.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What objection can there be to the manufacture of ice in any suitable place?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what would be the suitable place; but nobody else would have the right to determine whether the place was suitable or not except the Washington Market Company. I do not believe they ought to be able to get rights in the District of Columbia that no one else can, and be given authority that no one else has had so far. I do not see why they can not tell us where they want to manufacture the ice.

Mr. BABCOCK. Under their charter it is specified as to what they are authorized to do, and the opinion of their attorney is that they need additional power under that charter to do what you or I might do.

Mr. MANN. And hence you propose to give them the right to do that which neither you nor I can do.

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; it simply gives them authority under their charter to make additional ice. If I was running that market, I should go on and make the ice and not come to Congress for the authority.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to take the gentleman's judgment in preference to the judgment of the attorney of the market company, and let them go on and make the ice in any place they please, and their right can be tested in the courts afterwards.

Mr. BABCOCK. They do claim they have the right to do it under their charter.

Mr. MANN. Well, I hope the gentleman will not press this bill to-day, until Members have had an opportunity to ascertain more in reference to it.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman raises objection to the bill, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw it for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the bill.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21408) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "at least six months from the date of revocation of such license" the words "every violation of any provision of this act, except as provided in section 10, shall be punishable by a fine not to exceed $25, and in default thereof the person or persons so offending shall be committed for a period not to exceed thirty days, and this penalty shall also include such violations of section 10 for which no penalty is prescribed in said section 10."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHILD LABOR.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6364) to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up the following Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Felix Adler, Francis G. Caffey, Robert W. de Forest, Edward T. Devine, Homer Folks, William E. Harmon, John S. Huyler, Mrs. Florence Kelley, James H. Kirkland, V. Everit Macy, Edgar Gardner Murphy, Isaac N. Seligman, Miss Lillian D. Wald, Paul M. Warburg, and John W. Wood, and their successors and associates, be, and they hereby are, constituted a body corporate of the District of Columbia; that the name of such body corporate shall be National Child Labor Committee, and that by such name the said persons, or a majority of them, shall hold a meeting and adopt a constitution and by-laws, and shall have power to amend the same at pleasure: Provided, That such constitution or by-laws, or any amendments thereof, do not conflict with the laws of the United States and of the District of Columbia; and that they may use a common seal and alter and change the same at pleasure, and may take, receive, hold, and convey real and personal estate necessary for the purposes of the organization.

SEC. 2. That the objects of the said corporation shall be: To promote the welfare of society with respect to the employment of children in gainful occupations; to investigate and report the facts concerning child labor; to raise the standard of parental responsibility with respect to the employment of children; to assist in protecting children, by suitable legislation, against premature or otherwise injurious employment, and thus to aid in securing for them an opportunity for elementary education and physical development sufficient for the demands of citizenship and the requirements of industrial efficiency; to aid in promoting the enforcement of laws relating to child labor; to coordinate, unify, and supplement the work of State or local child-labor committees, and encourage the formation of such committees where they do not exist.

SEC. 3. That said corporation shall have a right to hold its meetings at any place in the United States as may be best suited or most advantageous for the carrying out of the purposes for which this corporation is formed.

SEC. 4. That said corporation shall not engage in any business for gain, the purposes of said corporation being educational and philanthropic.

SEC. 5. That this charter shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it too late to raise the question of consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is not too late.

Mr. GARRETT. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raises the question of consideration upon this bill. The question is, Will the House consider the bill?

The question being taken, the House refused to consider the bill.

CERTAIN ALLEYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for present consideration of the bill (S. 5565) to close certain alleys in the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of this bill, and that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to explain the purpose of the bill. As I understand, it transfers the title of an alley from the District of Columbia to certain private owners.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], who reported the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Clerk to read the letter from the Commissioners of the District, which explains the bill more fully than I can.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, May 5, 1906.

SENATOR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on Senate bill 5565, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, "to close certain alleys in the District of Columbia," which you referred to them for report touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

A plat is inclosed showing the alleys proposed to be closed, which are in squares 330 and 547. The nature of the rights of the District and the United States in and to the alleys in the two squares are different. In square 330 the alley was dedicated when the square was subdivided into lots, and under the form of dedication the District of Columbia acquired merely an easement or right of way over the alley, the fee remaining in the abutting property. In the case of the alley in square 547 the United States holds the title in fee to the ground contained in the alley, as this was one of the alleys laid out in the square in the original subdivision of the city of Washington into streets, avenues, lots, and squares, and the title to the ground in these original alleys is the same as that in the streets of the city, namely, that the United States holds the title in fee.

In square 330 a portion of the alley is occupied by buildings belonging to a street railroad company, the area occupied by the buildings being shown in green on the plat. The portion of the square not occupied by buildings is fenced in and the alley does not physically exist, being merely shown as an alley on the records in the surveyor's office. The Commissioners know of no reason for further continuing this space as an alley, as its use would be necessary only to the street car company, which occupies the whole square and which it is understood does not desire the alley. The Commissioners are therefore in favor of the first section of the bill as at present worded.

Square 547 is occupied by buildings of a street railroad company, as shown in green on the plat. The portion of the square not covered by buildings is inclosed by a fence, so that this alley does not physically exist, although it is shown on the records in the surveyor's office. The recorded alley contains 13,773 square feet, and as the title to the same is in the United States the Commissioners believe that the value of the ground contained in the alley should be paid by the owner or owners of the lots in the square before the alley is abandoned and closed. They therefore recommend that section 2 of the bill be amended by adding the following proviso thereto:

"Provided, That the present owner or owners of the lots in said square shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia the true value of the land contained in said alley as said true value shall be determined by the board of assistant assessors of the District of Columbia, the sum so deposited to be credited one-half to the United States and one-half to the District of Columbia; and upon such payment the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to convey the title to the land in said alley to such owner or owners (the said Commissioners being hereby vested with power and authority so to do)."

Also strike out the word "revert," in line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the words "be conveyed."

Also insert, after the word "of," in said line 16, the words "all of the lots in."

So that the said section 2 will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to abandon and close all alleys in square No. 547, lying between O and P streets, Four-and-a-half street, and Delaware avenue SW., in the city of Washington, D. C., the land in said alleys to be conveyed to the present owner or owners of all of the lots in the said square: Provided, That the present owner or owners of the lots in said square shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia the true value of the land contained in said alley as said true value shall be determined by the board of assistant assessors of the District of Columbia, the sum so deposited to be credited one-half to the United States and one-half to the District of Columbia, and upon such payment the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to convey the title to the land in said alleys to such owner or owners (the said Commissioners being hereby vested with power and authority so to do)."

A bill amended as suggested herein is inclosed, and the Commissioners recommend the passage of the bill as amended.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The Clerk read the following amendments recommended by the committee:

Page 2, line 1, insert before the word "the" the following: "which in no event shall be less than the average value of the abutting property."

Page 2, strike out all after the word 'owners," in line 11, and insert the following: " : Provided further, That the Commissioners are hereby authorized to reject the appraisement if in their opinion such appraisement is less than the value of said property."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

CONNECTING PARKWAY BETWEEN SIXTEENTH STREET AND ROCK CREEK PARK.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 129) for the opening of a connecting parkway along Piney Branch, between Sixteenth street and Rock Creek Park, District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, and to consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the bill read first.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, this is rather an important bill, and there is a considerable amount of money involved. This is a very thin House, and I believe that it should not be considered at such a time, and I will ask the chairman of the committee to withhold it until after the holidays. There is nothing pressing about the bill. It is a very important bill, and I think the House ought to know more about it. There are not many Members here to-day, and I would be glad to have it go over until after the holidays.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] who has charge of the measure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have no particular anxiety as to the immediate consideration of the bill. The bill was introduced a year ago and has been before the committee ever since. It has been recently amended and reported with a favorable recommendation. But in view of the size of the attendance of the House to-day, I will withdraw the bill from consideration to-dav

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MICHALEK, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the reference of the bill (H. R. 22671) to provide for the investigation of the water resources of the United States was changed from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

EXCLUSION OF JAPANESE PUPILS FROM SCHOOLS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which, with accompanying papers, was read, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

[For message see Senate proceedings of this date.]

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill (H. R. 22476) to amend the act to regulate commerce, so as to provide that publishers of newspapers and periodicals may enter into advertising contracts with common carriers and receive pay for such advertisements in transportation. The print has become exhausted.

The question was taken; and there was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Removal of intruders, Five Civilized Tribes: For the purpose of removing intruders and placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question in regard to the last paragraph. This is with reference to the pay of $15,000 for the removal of intruders, Five Civilized Tribes. Would that term "intruder" mean an Indian family?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; that refers to white people unlawfully upon the allotment of Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then suppose an Indian was living upon land belonging to his tribe and was demanding to have his lands allotted to himself. Would the Secretary use this money for the purpose of driving that Indian off that homestead?

Mr. CURTIS. No; it is not the purpose of this provision to remove Indians. The law provides a way for the settlement of a contest between Indians who claim the same allotment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is not what I was trying to get at. But this is what I am calling attention to: In the Choctaw country, Indian Territory, there are about 4,000,000 acres of land that the Secretary of the Interior by some kind of an order made to the Dawes Commission has reserved from allotment, and many of the Indians are now living on that land. They are asking the Secretary of the Interior to have these lands allotted to them. It is their home and has been from time immemorial. They were born there, and everything that they hold sacred is there. The Secretary is now refusing to allot 4,000,000 acres of these lands to these Indians; and I am not willing to vote money to take these Indians off these lands by force.

Mr. CURTIS. This item does not apply to them at all. The Indian has a right to make his own selection. If he refuses to make it within a given time, the Secretary or the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes has the right to make the selection for him.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman from Kansas advised as to why the Secretary has made this order withdrawing this 4,000,000 acres of Choctaw lands from allotment?

Mr. CURTIS. I know nothing about that except what I have read in the newspapers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it is an outrage that he should make such an order. I believe the Indians should have the lands allotted to them, as Congress has by law ordered him to do, and if I knew of some way by which I could reach him, I would do so by a resolution of some kind in the most drastic form.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Sac and

Fox Indians of the Missouri the sum of $100,400, the balance of the amount due the tribe under the second article of the treaty of October 21, 1837 (7 Stat. L., p. 540), and said sum shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay per capita to the Sac and Fox Indians of the Missouri tribe the said sum in the same manner as provided by the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 201);

In all, $8,070.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 26, "in all, $8,070," which is an error of the Printing Office.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion of the Zuni dam and irrigation project in New Mexico, $30,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, to go back a few lines, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he thinks this language in lines 6 and 7, page 38, "see Arizona for 'support and civilization of the Apache, etc.,' in Arizona and New Mexico," had not better be changed, so as to have named all of the Indians. I do not like the word "etc." The Indians referred to, I presume, are the Zuni and the Pueblo.

Mr. SHERMAN. The appropriation is made under the head of Arizona, and it is made in a way that covers the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico. That reference is made on page 38 simply to show that it is cared for in another place.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the other place explains it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

OSAGES. (TREATY.)

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee, I offer the following amendment to follow the word "treaty," in line 15, page 43.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, after line 15, following the word "treaty," insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Osage tribe of Indians in Oklahoma the sum of $69,120, the amount due the tribe under the sixth article of the treaty of June 2, 1825 (7 Stat. L., p. 153), being the value of 54 sections of land set apart by said treaty for educational purposes, per Senate resolution of January 9, 1838, and said sum shall draw interest at 5 per cent per annum."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the interest on this sum has been paid annually under the treaty for a good many years to the Osage Indians. Under the act of last June we provided that all lands and all property of the Osage Indians should be segregated and placed to their credit, and that makes it necessary to make the appropriations so that can be carried out, and I will have printed in the RECORD a statement of the Secretary in reference to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This, I understand, is in accordance with a treaty that has already been made; it is a treaty stipulation.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a treaty stipulation and the money has never been appropriated. We have been paying them, as we have the right to do under the treaty, the interest. Now, in the bill of last June we provided the property should be segregated, and that makes necessary this appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is simply to carry out a treaty?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerical work and stationery in the office of the United States surveyor-general required on surveys within the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak., $500.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 13, page 51, insert:

"To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to complete the payment for surveying the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak., $1,888.10, to be immediately available."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This amendment is simply to provide money to pay for a survey which has been made and the fund is short the amount stated, and I desire to print in the RECORD a letter to my colleague on this subject from the Department.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1906.

Hon. EBEN W. MARTIN,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 8th instant, relating to the account of Orville H. Southmayd, United States deputy surveyor for surveys within the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, S. Dak., executed under contract No. 157, dated April 18, 1904, I have the honor to state that said account was examined and approved by this Office November 9, 1906, in the sum of $3,903.04, and the same was transmitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for his action.

Referring to the above account, in a letter to this Office, dated December 10, 1906, the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs states:

"In connection therewith you are informed that the appropriation 'Surveying Pine Ridge and Standing Rock reservations,' available, and out of which you recommend payment, is exhausted, with the exception of $2,014.94; and in view of said fact Mr. Southmayd's claim will be allowed by this Office for the amount of the appropriation available, and the balance, $1,888.10, will be suspended until appropriation is made for same by Congress."

Contracts for the survey of lands within Indian reservations are made under the direction of this office, as authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, the appropriation for payment of same being under the supervision of the Indian Office.

From the statement quoted above, it appears that the appropriation to which contract No. 157 is chargeable has been exhausted with the payment of $2,014.94 to Mr. Southmayd, leaving a balance of $1,888.10 due him for work authorized and executed under his contract.

This is an equitable claim against the United States, and the above facts will be reported to the Secretary of the Interior, with recommendation that Congress be asked for a special appropriation to pay the same.

Very respectfully, W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Department recommends the appropriation be made?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has not this reservation heretofore been surveyed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No, sir; it was an original survey and completes the survey.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How has the Indian Department heretofore ascertained where the Indian lands were without a survey?

Mr. SHERMAN. The survey has been completed, as I understood the gentleman from South Dakota to say, but there is a shortage in the payment therefor, and this comes in in the nature of a deficiency of $1,800 to pay the balance that is due for work already completed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the reservation has heretofore been surveyed, if I understand it aright?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But not paid for?

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a little balance still due on the survey.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the D'Wamish and other allied tribes in Washington, including pay of employees, $5,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, line 24, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "seven;" so as to read "seven thousand dollars."

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington the occasion for offering this amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The purpose for which I offer this amendment is in order to get $2,000 additional to supply machinery for a sawmill on the Tulalip Indian Reservation. They have a sawmill on the reservation that was built in 1853, and the present machinery was put in about 1865. They have plenty of power and plenty of labor and they have timber growing on the reservation, and if this additional appropriation was made, so that they could have a sawmill installed, it would enable them to cut up their own timber and construct their own houses, and it would be not only a financial saving to the school, but it would also teach the Indians how to construct their own buildings and how to run a sawmill.

When the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was there last summer he investigated the matter personally and recommended it. I have a letter now from the Department recommending it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was not estimated for.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; it was not estimated for.

Mr. SHERMAN. The appropriation here is what was asked for in the estimates. The Washington Indians are about as forward in civilization as any of the country. Why could not they construct their own sawmill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They only ask for sufficient to purchase the machinery. They do not ask that we construct a sawmill. It is simply $2,000 for the purchase of machinery, and they will construct their own mill if the machinery is purchased.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the gentleman to say the Commissioner, after making a personal investigation, has communicated with him and asked that he present this amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The Commissioner, after making a personal investigation, indorsed the proposition; but he was not in his office this morning when I called him up, but I have this letter from the Acting Commissioner——

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman need not read the letter. If he simply states that either the Commissioner or Acting Commissioner recommended this appropriation be made, it will be sufficient.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Both of them have recommended it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "treaty" in line 3, page 56. The word "treaty" ought not to be there. The provision following it is not a treaty provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made by the Clerk.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, we passed over a provision by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Pages 9 and 10, and I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment page 10.

After "treaty," line 1, insert "or who may have an interest in any allotment by inheritance."
In line 2, after "allotment," insert "or such inherited interest."
Line 5 insert "or heir."
Line 6, after "land," insert "or interest."
Line 9, after "title," insert "to the land or interest so sold."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will state that this amendment has been submitted to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I consent to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 23 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] asks unanimous consent to return to page 23 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 23, line 14, insert:
"The Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to make all necessary arrangements for the transfer from the clerks of the United States courts in the Indian Territory and their deputies, in their capacities as clerks and as ex officio recorders, to the proper State or county officials of the State of Oklahoma, when organized, all records, papers, and files now in the custody of said clerks and their deputies, and he is authorized to pay the necessary expense incident thereto out of the excess of emoluments earned by said clerks or as ex officio recorders of deeds and other instruments during the calendar years 1906 and 1907, notwithstanding the act of February 19, 1903 (32 Stat. L., p. 842).

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the gentleman from Kansas can or will state to us what the probable amount of the funds would be that are proposed to be used for this purpose?

Mr. CURTIS. That is impossible to tell. They will simply pay for copying all the records that must be turned over to the officers of the new State, all of the probate records and all of the court records which must be turned over, and this authorizes the Attorney-General to have the work done and pay for it out of the fees that are now paid in to clerks and turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman any assurance that the amount will be sufficient to pay for this clerical work?

Mr. CURTIS. There is no question about that; there will be quite a large amount left. It will not take over 20 per cent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is very necessary that this work be done and that the transfers be made properly, but I would rather appropriate the funds direct from the Treasury.

Mr. CURTIS. There will be plenty of money to cover the expense.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It seems to me it would be better legislation to let that money go under the old law where it was directed to go and let us make a direct appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. Only a part of that goes into the school fund. The greater bulk of it goes into the Treasury now every year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would there be any difference in cost in taking it out of the Treasury direct and paying for it rather than doing it this way, taking it on the wing?

Mr. CURTIS. It was thought better to let the expense be paid out of the fees. I hope the gentleman will not object to the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. My object is to have the transfer made in the most direct manner.

Mr. CURTIS. There was no estimate made as to the cost of this transfer, and we thought it should be provided out of the fees, because there will be an ample amount of fees collected to pay all the expenses. We did not know just how much it would cost, and it would be almost impossible to estimate the cost.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You have considered the matter fully, and believe that this is sufficient to cover the cost?

Mr. CURTIS. I believe it is ample.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asked me what proportion of the appropriation carried on page 7 of the bill, appropriating $5,000 to pay for the transportation of Indian pupils to positions where they could receive remunerative employment, had been paid for the transportation of Alaskan Indians. I was not able to state at that time, because I had not the data before me, but yesterday evening I found that $49 of the $5,000 had been expended for it this year. His inquiry was how much had there been expended for this purpose in the last fiscal year. There was no such provision in the last appropriation bill, and up to date $49 has been paid for the transportation of one Alaskan pupil this year to California, where a position was awaiting him.

I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 22580, the Indian appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointments:

Mr. SAUNDERS, to the Committee on Elections No. 1 and Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Georgia, to the Committee on the Territories and Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

Mr. RIORDAN, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for the Iowa and Sac and Fox tribes of Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Kennebec River from the mouth to Gardiner, Me.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with accompanying illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under caluse 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17875) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of W. W. Peirce, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5555); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DIXON of Montana: A bill (H. R. 22883) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Bozeman, Mont.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22884) appropriating money for the survey and construction of a wagon road within the Yellowstone National Park—to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BENSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of Eureka, Moline, Mineral, Franklin County, and Cherokee County, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GEARIN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Portland and Multnomah County, in the State of Oregon, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Camden,

N. J., praying that an investigation be made into the recent discharge of Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and that justice be accorded them; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cliffwood, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCOTT presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Pleasants, W. Va., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURKETT presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 7292) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Prior; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE presented the memorial of Horace Mann, of Athol, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BULKELEY presented a memorial of Admiral Foote Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for a discontinuance of the canteen at the National Soldiers' Homes; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of 20 citizens of South Windham, North Windham, and Willimantic, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring the closing of certain places of business in the District of Columbia on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 153, Patrons of Husbandry, of Bridgewater, Conn., remonstrating against any further appropriation for the free distribution of seeds and plants; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BERRY presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Batesville, Ark., praying that an appropriation of $10,000 be made for the improvement of the Upper White River in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

WITHDRAWAL OF CHOCTAW INDIAN LANDS FROM ALLOTMENT.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I have a number of telegrams all relating to the withdrawal of lands from allotment in Indian Territory. One of them states:

In the withdrawal of lands in the Choctaw Nation from allotments, as per the telegraphic orders of Secretary Hitchcock, December 12, an irreparable injury is done not only Arkansas and Fort Smith, but also Indian Territory and many towns situated therein. Acordingly we enter a vigorous protest and ask that the lands in question be restored to their former status.

This was adopted by the Commercial Club of Fort Smith, Ark., and sent to me by the president of the club.

If I may have unanimous consent, I should like to say that I do not know by what authority the Secretary of the Interior has withdrawn a part of the lands in the Indian Territory from allotment, the law of Congress expressly providing that they shall be allotted. It is said that it is contemplated to make a forest reserve in the Indian Territory. Whether it is expected to place in a forest reserve these lands, which belong to the Indians and not to the Government, by Executive order or by act of Congress I am not advised, but it seems to me a most remarkable proceeding in either case and utterly inexcusable from any standpoint. I hope the Committee on Indian Affairs will investigate the matter and report at an early date. I ask that these petitions be referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 20988) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903;

A bill (H. R. 19523) to authorize Thomas J. Ewing and George B. Patton, of Catlettsburg, Ky.; Otto Burger, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Herbert Haynard, of Kenova, W. Va., and Charles Miller, of Huntington, W. Va., to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River; and

A bill (H. R. 21951) to authorize the Alabama, Tennessee and Northern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River, in the State of Alabama.

Mr. DICK, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13675) to ratify and confirm the acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma, passed in the year 1905, relating to an insane asylum for the Territory of Oklahoma, and providing for the establishment and maintenance of an insane asylum for the Territory of Oklahoma at Fort Supply, in Woodward County, Okla., and making appropriation therefor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ALLEGHENY RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21200) to authorize the county of Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the Allegheny River, in Allegheny County, Pa., to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent to take up presently for consideration the bill just reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE AT FORT SNELLING, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 196) relating to the construction of a bridge at Fort Snelling, Minn., to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WHYTE introduced a bill (S. 7344) granting an increase of pension to Clara P. Coleman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 7345) for the relief of the trustees of the Reformed Church of Burkettsville, Md.;

A bill (S. 7346) for relief of the council of Zion Evangelical Lutheran Church, of Williamsport, Md.;

A bill (S. 7347) for the relief of the Frederick Academy of the Visitation, of Frederick, Md.; and

A bill (S. 7348) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Hancock, Md.

Mr. DILLINGHAM introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7349) granting an increase of pension to Luke M. Lewis; and

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 7351) granting a pension to Benjamin Westermann; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DRYDEN introduced a bill (S. 7352) granting a pension to Eliza W. Newell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DICK introduced a bill (S. 7353) granting an increase of pension to Augusta T. Eichholtz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 7354) for the establishment of a park at the junction of Maryland avenue, Fifteenth street, and H street NE., Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KITTREDGE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7355) granting an increase of pension to William McHenry Plotner; and

A bill (S. 7356) granting an increase of pension to Henry Schlosser.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 7357) granting an increase of pension to Levi S. Bailey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 7358) granting an increase of pension to David Turner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 7359) to provide for the investigation of the water resources in the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Geological Survey.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7360) for the relief of Lucy L. Bane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BENSON introduced a bill (S. 7361) granting an increase of pension to George Downing; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7370) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Metoyer and Antoinette Metoyer, deceased; and

A bill (S. 7371) for the relief of the estate of Florentin Conaut, deceased.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 7372) to authorize the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy, as a gift, of a sail boat for use of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 7373) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Thomas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 7374) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7375) to correct the military record of Dennis O'Brien; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 7376) to amend section 5153 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ELKINS. I move that the document accompanying the bill be printed, as it explains the amendments to the existing law proposed to be made by the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARMACK introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7377) granting an increase of pension to Martha J. Callins;

A bill (S. 7378) granting a pension to Giles M. Caton; and

A bill (S. 7379) granting a pension to Mary E. Dougherty.

Mr. ANKENY introduced a bill (S. 7380) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Harris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate an additional sum of $15,000 for the contingent expenses of the New Mexico Territorial legislature, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Territories.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL E. BRATTON, DECEASED.

On motion of Mr. BACON, it was Ordered, That permission be, and hereby is, granted for the withdrawal of the affidavits and papers relating to the claim of the estate of Samuel E. Bratton, deceased, now on file in the office of the clerk of the Committee on Claims of the Senate.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

On motion of Mr. KITTREDGE, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate and delivered to the Senate document room 2,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States concerning the Panama Canal communicated to the Senate December 17, 1906.

Mr. LODGE. In regard to the message of the President concerning the Panama Canal, it was printed, I see, in the reform spelling. Since then the Executive order has been withdrawn and the House of Representatives passed a resolution. The sense of the House is that the documents printed by order of Congress shall be in what I may call "normal" spelling. I suggest, as we are ordering additional copies of this message, the Executive order having been withdrawn, that it be printed normally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WEBB C. MAGLATHLIN.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar the bill (S. 6729) authorizing the President to appoint Webb C. Maglathlin a second assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint Webb C. Maglathlin a second assistant engineer in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service upon the occurring of the first vacancy after the passage of this act in the grade of second assistant engineer in that Service, provided that Webb C. Maglathlin passes satisfactorily the physical examination required by the regulations of that Service.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts explain the bill. I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce. The case is a very simple one. This young man had gone through the usual training at school for the Revenue-Marine Service; he passed all his examinations, and was just about to receive his appointment when Congress changed the age law, which put him just two months out of the age. It is thought by the Department to be a very hard case indeed, he having passed all his examinations, after having been prepared at school; and it can only be cured by an act of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6872) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak."

Mr. McCUMBER. There was unanimous consent given yesterday that we would take up the pension bills after the close of the morning business. I simply wish to suggest to Senators that following the rule we have heretofore followed, when unanimous consent is given to take up certain bills it justifies the absence of Senators who are not interested in those bills and there being very few Senators present this morning it would seem inappropriate to change the unanimous-consent order at this time to go to the consideration of other bills. I have no objection to the bill called up by the Senator from Ohio, but I am anxious to have the bills on the Pension Calendar disposed of.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not have in mind at the moment the consent agreement of yesterday, and I was not aware that the morning routine business had been declared by the Chair to be closed. The bill I have called up, I may say, is one of only a few lines, for the extension of time in which to commence the construction of a bridge, and I wish to get it to the other House.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not make any objection to the consideration of the bill. I merely made a suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. I believe it has been the custom to incorporate in such bills a provision reserving the right to alter or repeal the act.

Mr. BERRY. This merely extends the time.

Mr. SPOONER. That provision is in the original act?

Mr. BERRY. It is in the original act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Secretary will read the bills on the Pension Calendar in their order.

Roberts, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATE M. MINER.

The bill (S. 6239) granting an increase of pension to Kate M. Miner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Kate M. Miner, widow of Nelson H. Miner, late of Company E, Hatch's battalion Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE PORTER.

The bill (S. 6569) granting an increase of pension to George Porter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George Porter, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILBUR F. HODGE.

The bill (S. 6568) granting an increase of pension to Wilbur F. Hodge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Wilbur F. Hodge, late first lieutenant Company H, Eighty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL G. SMITH.

The bill (S. 5073) granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel G. Smith, late of Company G, Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaac G. Clark, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS KELLY.

The bill (S. 679) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Kelly was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-six;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Kelly, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6822) granting an increase of pension to Christopher Christopherson was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that this bill and the succeeding one, the bill (S. 6821) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan M. Adams, be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be passed over for the present.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This completes the Pension Calendar, with the exception of those bills passed over.

AGUSTA P. MORGAN.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to call up Senate bill 6723, which was passed over a while ago.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6723) granting an increase of pension to Agusta P. Morgan, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Agusta P. Morgan, widow of Henry C. Morgan, late captain, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the letter which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD. It is practically a supplemental report in this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter referred to by the Senator from North Dakota will be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, December 18, 1906.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Recalling our conversation of this afternoon in regard to Senate bill No. 6723, Calendar No. 4469, "granting an increase of pension to Agusta P. Morgan," I will say that I have known Mrs. Morgan for more than forty years. She is now what I would call a "helpless invalid," caused by a disease which is accurately described in the letters of Doctors Porter, Mitchell, Gandy, and Cragin, which I inclose you herewith. (These letters belong with the papers in this case in the Senate files, having been withdrawn by me to-day.) To my personal knowledge Mrs. Morgan has for several years required the constant attendance of another person to administer to her wants. She is unable to move without being lifted from her bed or a chair in which she is seated by her attendant, and at times is a most severe and heroic sufferer from the pains attendant upon her complaint. She has to be lifted from her bed by her attendant, dressed, placed in a chair, where she remains during her waking hours, and is practically unable to feed herself. She is replaced in her bed at the close of the day by her attendant and is in such physical condition that she can not turn herself after retiring, but is compelled to lie in the one position through the night.

I do not feel that I can say more to recommend her case to the careful consideration of your committee.

I feel that I am fairly justified in urging you to increase the amount of pension reported by your committee to the amount which I placed in the original bill—$30 per month—or even to a larger sum, if you can consistently make such a recommendation.

Yours, very truly,

M. G. BULKELEY.

Mr. McCUMBER. In view of the facts set forth in the letter and the report, I ask that the amendment of the committee may be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JONATHAN M. ADAMS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I also desire to call up Senate bill 6821.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6821) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan M. Adams, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jonathan M. Adams, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. Upon a further report in regard to this case, which was given to me to-day, but which I will not ask to have inserted in the RECORD, I request that the committee amendment be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTOPHERSON.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now call up Senate bill 6822.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6822) granting an increase of pension to Christopher Christopherson, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Christopher Christopherson, late of Company A, Third Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the same ground, as in the preceding case, I ask that the committee amendment may be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF W AND ADAMS STREETS NW.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there are various messages from the House of Representatives returning Senate bills with amendments, which I should like to have laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5119) authorizing the extension of W and Adams streets NW.; which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of W and Adams streets NW. east to North Capitol street; W street to be 80 feet and Adams street to be 90 feet wide.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected; and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. MARTIN.

WIDENING OF BLADENSBURG ROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 55) for the widening of Bladensburg road, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I take occasion to say that the amendment of the House of Representatives to this bill and the others on the Vice-President's table is in every instance identical in terms with, and conforms to, the law we passed during the last session of Congress. So if the amendment is read in one case it will not be necessary to read it in the other cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the dedication to the District of Columbia of two-thirds of the land necessary for the widening of the Bladensburg road in the District of Columbia from H or Boundary street to the District of Columbia line, according to the street extension plans of said District, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to complete the widening of said road to a width of 90 feet between the limits named.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF SEVENTH AND FRANKLIN STREETS NE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 64) for the extension of Seventh street and Franklin street NE., and for other purposes; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Seventh street NE. southward from its present termination near its intersection with Channing street, on a line parallel with the Metropolitan Railroad, to Rhode Island avenue, Sixth street southward to Central avenue, and also Franklin street NE. from Central avenue eastward to the Metropolitan Railroad and westward from its present termination between Fifth and Sixth streets to Fourth street NE., and also to straighten the western line of Seventh street between Hamlin and Irving streets NE.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits, as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That the total amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

WIDENING OF COLUMBIA ROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 68) for the widening of a section of Columbia road east of Sixteenth street; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within thirty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to widen Columbia road between the east side of Sixteenth street extended and the western limit of the subdivision of the north grounds of Columbia College to a total width of 60 feet, concentric with the present improved roadway on such street.

SEC. 2. That assessments shall be made by the jury as benefits as contemplated in section 491g of the subchapter of the code hereinbefore referred to: Provided, That at least one-half of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages, plus the cost and expenses of the proceedings, shall be assessed by the said jury as benefits.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessment for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF TWENTY-THIRD STREET NW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 133) authorizing the extension of Twenty-third street NW. to Kalorama road; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of suchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Twenty-third street NW. from U street to Kalorama road, so as to include so much of lots 9 and 24, L. R. Tuttle's subdivision, and lots 1 and 18, block 20, Kalorama Heights subdivision, as lie between two parallel curved lines 50 feet apart, the easterly of which begins at a point on north line of lot 9, L. Provided further, That the Commissioners are hereby authorized to reject the appraisement if in their opinion such appraisement is less than the value of said property.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

In response to Senate resolution of December 6 addressed to me, and to the two Senate resolutions addressed to him, the Secretary of War has, by my direction, submitted to me a report which I herewith send to the Senate, together with several documents, including a letter of General Nettleton and memoranda as to precedents for the summary discharge or mustering out of regiments or companies, some or all of the members of which had been guilty of misconduct.

I ordered the discharge of nearly all the members of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry by name, in the exercise of my constitutional power and in pursuance of what, after full consideration, I found to be my constitutional duty as Commander in Chief of the United States Army. I am glad to avail myself of the opportunity afforded by these resolutions to lay before the Congress the following facts as to the murderous conduct of certain members of the companies in question and as to the conspiracy by which many of the other members of these companies saved the criminals from justice, to the disgrace of the United States uniform.

I call your attention to the accompanying reports of Maj. Augustus P. Blocksom, of Lieut. Col. Leonard A. Lovering, and of Brig. Gen. Ernest A. Garlington, the Inspector-General of the United States Army, of their investigations into the conduct of the troops in question. An effort has been made to discredit the fairness of the investigation into the conduct of these colored troops by pointing out that General Garlington is a Southerner. Precisely the same action would have been taken had the troops been white—indeed, the discharge would probably have been made in more summary fashion. General Garlington is a native of South Carolina; Lieutenant-Colonel Lovering is a native of New Hampshire; Major Blocksom is a native of Ohio. As it happens, the disclosure of the guilt of the troops was made in the report of the officer who comes from Ohio, and the efforts of the officer who comes from South Carolina were confined to the endeavor to shield the innocent men of the companies in question, if any such there were, by securing information which would enable us adequately to punish the guilty. But I wish it distinctly understood that the fact of the birthplace of either officer is one which I absolutely refuse to consider. The standard of professional honor and of loyalty to the flag and the service is the same for all officers and all enlisted men of the United States Army, and I resent with the keenest indignation any effort to draw any line among them based upon birthplace, creed, or any other consideration of the kind. I should put the same entire faith in these reports if it had happened that they were all made by men coming from some one State, whether in the South or the North, the East or the West, as I now do, when, as it happens, they were made by officers born in different States.

Major Blocksom's report is most careful, is based upon the testimony of scores of eyewitnesses—testimony which conflicted only in nonessentials and which established the essential facts beyond chance of successful contradiction. Not only has no successful effort been made to traverse his findings in any essential particular, but, as a matter of fact, every trustworthy report from outsiders amply corroborates them, by far the best of these outside reports being that Gen. A. B. Nettleton, made in a letter to the Secretary of War, which I herewith append; General Nettleton being an ex-Union soldier, a consistent friend of the colored man throughout his life, a lifelong Republican, a citizen of Illinois, and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under President Harrison.

It appears that in Brownsville, the city immediately beside which Fort Brown is situated, there had been considerable feeling between the citizens and the colored troops of the garrison companies. Difficulties had occurred, there being a conflict of evidence as to whether the citizens or the colored troops were to blame. My impression is that, as a matter of fact, in these difficulties there was blame attached to both sides; but this is a wholly unimportant matter for our present purpose, as nothing that occurred offered in any shape or way an excuse or justification for the atrocious conduct of the troops when, in lawless and murderous spirit, and under cover of the night, they made their attack upon the citizens.

The attack was made near midnight on August 13. The following facts as to this attack are made clear by Major Blocksom's investigation and have not been, and, in my judgment, can not be, successfully controverted. From nine to fifteen or twenty of the colored soldiers took part in the attack. They leaped over the walls from the barracks and hurried through the town. They shot at whomever they saw moving, and they shot into houses where they saw lights. In some of these houses there were women and children, as the would-be murderers must have known. In one house in which there were two women and five children some ten shots went through at a height of about 4½ feet above the floor, one putting out the lamp upon the table. The lieutenant of police of the town heard the firing and rode toward it. He met the raiders, who, as stated, were about fifteen colored soldiers. They instantly started firing upon him. He turned and rode off, and they continued firing upon him until they had killed his horse. They shot him in the right arm (it was afterwards amputated above the elbow). A number of shots were also fired at two other policemen. The raiders fired several times into a hotel, some of the shots being aimed at a guest sitting by a window. They shot into a saloon, killing the bartender and wounding another man. At the same time other raiders fired into another house in which women and children were sleeping, two of the shots going through the mosquito bar over the bed in which the mistress of the house and her two children were lying. Several other houses were struck by bullets. It was at night, and the streets of the town are poorly lighted, so that none of the individual raiders were recognized; but the evidence of many witnesses of all classes was conclusive to the effect that the raiders were negro soldiers. The shattered bullets, shells, and clips of the Government rifles, which were found on the ground, are merely corroborative. So are the bullet holes in the houses; some of which it appears must, from the direction, have been fired from the fort just at the moment when the soldiers left it. Not a bullet hole appears in any of the structures of the fort.

The townspeople were completely surprised by the unprovoked and murderous savagery of the attack. The soldiers were the aggressors from start to finish. They met with no substantial resistance, and one and all who took part in that raid stand as deliberate murderers, who did murder one man, who tried to murder others, and who tried to murder women and children. The act was one of horrible atrocity, and so far as I am aware, unparalleled for infamy in the annals of the United States Army.

The white officers of the companies were completely taken by surprise, and at first evidently believed that the firing meant that the townspeople were attacking the soldiers. It was not until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning that any of them became aware of the truth. I have directed a careful investigation into the conduct of the officers, to see if any of them were blameworthy, and I have approved the recommendation of the War Department that two be brought before a court-martial.

As to the noncommissioned officers and enlisted men, there can be no doubt whatever that many were necessarily privy, after if not before the attack, to the conduct of those who took actual part in this murderous riot. I refer to Major Blocksom's report for proof of the fact that certainly some and probably all of the noncommissioned officers in charge of quarters who were responsible for the gun racks and had keys thereto in their personal possession knew what men were engaged in the attack.

Major Penrose, in command of the post, in his letter (included in the Appendix) gives the reasons why he was reluctantly convinced that some of the men under him—as he thinks, from 7 to 10—got their rifles, slipped out of quarters to do the shooting, and returned to the barracks without being discovered, the shooting all occurring within two and a half short blocks of the barracks. It was possible for the raiders to go from the fort to the farthest point of firing and return in less than ten minutes, for the distance did not exceed 350 yards.

Such are the facts of this case. General Nettleton, in his letter herewith appended, states that next door to where he is writing in Brownsville is a small cottage where a children's party had just broken up before the house was riddled by United States bullets, fired by United States troops, from United States Springfield rifles, at close range, with the purpose of killing or maiming the inmates, including the parents and children who were still in the well-lighted house, and whose escape from death under such circumstances was astonishing. He states that on another street he daily looks upon fresh bullet scars where a volley from similar Government rifles was fired into the side and windows of a hotel occupied at the time by sleeping or frightened guests from abroad who could not possibly have given any offense to the assailants. He writes that the chief of the Brownsville police is again on duty from hospital, and carries an empty sleeve because he was shot by Federal soldiers from the adjacent garrison in the course of their murderous foray; and not far away is the fresh grave of an unoffending citizen of the place, a boy in years, who was wantonly shot down by these United States soldiers while unarmed and attempting to escape.

The effort to confute this testimony so far has consisted in the assertion or implication that the townspeople shot one another in order to discredit the soldiers—an absurdity too gross to need discussion, and unsupported by a shred of evidence. There is no question as to the murder and the attempted murders; there is no question that some of the soldiers were guilty thereof; there is no question that many of their comrades privy to the deed have combined to shelter the criminals from justice. These comrades of the murderers, by their own action, have rendered it necessary either to leave all the men, including the murderers, in the Army, or to turn them all out; and under such circumstances there was no alternative, for the usefulness of the Army would be at an end were we to permit such an outrage to be committed with impunity.

In short, the evidence proves conclusively that a number of the soldiers engaged in a deliberate and concerted attack, as cold blooded as it was cowardly; the purpose being to terrorize the community, and to kill or injure men, women, and children in their homes and beds or on the streets, and this at an hour of the night when concerted or effective resistance or defense was out of the question, and when detection by identification of the criminals in the United States uniform was well-nigh impossible. So much for the original crime. A blacker never stained the annals of our Army. It has been supplemented by another, only less black, in the shape of a successful conspiracy of silence for the purpose of shielding those who took part in the original conspiracy of murder. These soldiers were not schoolboys on a frolic. They were full-grown men, in the uniform of the United States Army, armed with deadly weapons, sworn to uphold the laws of the United States, and under every obligation of oath and honor not merely to refrain from criminality, but with the sturdiest rigor to hunt down criminality; and the crime they committed or connived at was murder. They perverted the power put into their hands to sustain the law into the most deadly violation of the law. The noncommissioned officers are primarily responsible for the discipline and good conduct of the men; they are appointed to their positions for the very purpose of preserving this discipline and good conduct, and of detecting and securing the punishment of every enlisted man who does what is wrong. They fill, with reference to the discipline, a part that the commissioned officers are of course unable to fill, although the ultimate responsibility for the discipline can never be shifted from the shoulders of the latter. Under any ordinary circumstances the first duty of the noncommissioned officers, as of the commissioned officers, is to train the private in the ranks so that he may be an efficient fighting man against a foreign foe. But there is an even higher duty, so obvious that it is not under ordinary circumstances necessary so much as to allude to it—the duty of training the soldier so that he shall be a protection and not a menace to his peaceful fellow-citizens, and above all to the women and children of the nation. Unless this duty is well performed, the Army becomes a mere dangerous mob; and if conduct such as that of the murderers in question is not, where possible, punished, and, where this is not possible, unless the chance of its repetition is guarded against in the most thoroughgoing fashion, it would be better that the entire Army should be disbanded. It is vital for the Army to be imbued with the spirit which will make every man in it, and above all, the officers and noncommissioned officers, feel it a matter of highest obligation to discover and punish, and not to shield, the criminal in uniform.

Yet some of the noncommissioned officers and many of the men of the three companies in question have banded together in a conspiracy to protect the assassins and would-be assassins who have disgraced their uniform by the conduct above related. Many of these noncommissioned officers and men must have known, and all of them may have known, circumstances which would have led to the conviction of those engaged in the murderous assault. They have stolidly and as one man broken their oaths of enlistment and refused to help discover the criminals.

By my direction every effort was made to persuade those innocent of murder among them to separate themselves from the guilty by helping bring the criminals to justice. They were warned that if they did not take advantage of the offer they would all be discharged from the service and forbidden again to enter the employ of the Government. They refused to profit by the warning. I accordingly had them discharged. If any organization of troops in the service, white or black, is guilty of similar conduct in the future I shall follow precisely the same course. Under no circumstances will I consent to keep in the service bodies of men whom the circumstances show to be a menace to the country. Incidentally I may add that the soldiers of longest service and highest position who suffered because of the order, so far from being those who deserve most sympathy, deserve least, for they are the very men upon whom we should be able especially to rely to prevent mutiny and murder.

People have spoken as if this discharge from the service was a punishment. I deny emphatically that such is the case, because as punishment it is utterly inadequate. The punishment meet for mutineers and murderers such as those guilty of the Brownsville assault is death; and a punishment only less severe ought to be meted out to those who have aided and abetted mutiny and murder and treason by refusing to help in their detection. I would that it were possible for me to have punished the guilty men. I regret most keenly that I have not been able to do so.

Be it remembered always that these men were all in the service of the United States under contracts of enlistment, which by their terms and by statute were terminable by my direction as Commander in Chief of the Army. It was my clear duty to terminate those contracts when the public interest demanded it; and it would have been a betrayal of the public interest on my part not to terminate the contracts which were keeping in the service of the United States a body of mutineers and murderers.

Any assertion that these men were dealt with harshly because they were colored men is utterly without foundation. Officers or enlisted men, white men or colored men, who were guilty of such conduct, would have been treated in precisely the same way; for there can be nothing more important than for the United States Army, in all its membership, to understand that its arms can not be turned with impunity against the peace and order of the civil community.

There are plenty of precedents for the action taken. I call your attention to the memoranda herewith submitted from The Military Secretary's office of the War Department, and a memorandum from The Military Secretary inclosing a piece by ex-Corporal Hesse, now chief of division in The Military Secretary's office, together with a letter from District Attorney James Wilkinson, of New Orleans. The district attorney's letter recites several cases in which white United States soldiers, being arrested for crime, were tried, and every soldier and employee of the regiment, or in the fort at which the soldier was stationed, volunteered all they knew, both before and at the trial, so as to secure justice.

In one case the soldier was acquitted. In another case the soldier was convicted of murder, the conviction resulting from the fact that every soldier, from the commanding officer to the humblest private, united in securing all the evidence in their power about the crime. In other cases, for less offense, soldiers were convicted purely because their comrades in arms, in a spirit of fine loyalty to the honor of the service, at once told the whole story of the troubles and declined to identify themselves with the criminals.

During the civil war numerous precedents for the action taken by me occurred in the shape of the summary discharge of regiments or companies because of misconduct on the part of some or all of their members. The Sixtieth Ohio was summarily discharged, on the ground that the regiment was disorganized, mutinous, and worthless. The Eleventh New York was discharged by reason of general demoralization and numerous desertions. Three companies of the Fifth Missouri Cavalry and one company of the Fourth Missouri Cavalry were mustered out of the service of the United States without trial by court-martial by reason of mutinous conduct and disaffection of the majority of the members of these companies (an almost exact parallel to my action). Another Missouri regiment was mustered out of service because it was in a state bordering closely on mutiny. Other examples, including New Jersey, Maryland, and other organizations, are given in the inclosed papers.

I call your particular attention to the special field order of Brig. Gen. U. S. Grant, issued from the headquarters of the Thirteenth Army Corps on November 16, 1862, in reference to the Twentieth Illinois. Members of this regiment had broken into a store and taken goods to the value of some $1,240, and the rest of the regiment, including especially two officers, failed, in the words of General Grant, to "exercise their authority to ferret out the men guilty of the offenses." General Grant accordingly mustered out of the service of the United States the two officers in question, and assessed the sum of $1,240 against the said regiment as a whole, officers and men to be assessed pro rata on their pay. In its essence this action is precisely similar to that I have taken; although the offense was of course trivial compared to the offense with which I had to deal.

Ex-Corporal Hesse recites what occurred in a United States regular regiment in the spring of 1860. (Corporal Hesse subsequently, when the regiment was surrendered to the Confederates by General Twiggs, saved the regimental colors by wrapping them about his body, under his clothing, and brought them north in safety, receiving a medal of honor for his action.) It appears that certain members of the regiment lynched a barkeeper who had killed one of the soldiers. Being unable to discover the culprits, Col. Robert E. Lee, then in command of the Department of Texas, ordered the company to be disbanded and the members transferred to other companies and discharged at the end of their enlistment, without honor. Owing to the outbreak of the civil war, and the consequent loss of records and confusion, it is not possible to say what finally became of this case.

When General Lee was in command of the Army of Northern Virginia, as will appear from the inclosed clipping from the Charlotte Observer, he issued an order in October, 1864, disbanding a certain battalion for cowardly conduct, stating at the time his regret that there were some officers and men belonging to the organization who, although not deserving it, were obliged to share in the common disgrace because the good of the service demanded it.

In addition to the discharges of organizations, which are of course infrequent, there are continual cases of the discharge of individual enlisted men without honor and without trial by court-martial. The official record shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30 last such discharges were issued by the War Department without trial by court-martial in the cases of 352 enlisted men of the Regular Army, 35 of them being on account of "having become disqualified for service through own misconduct." Moreover, in addition to the discharges without honor ordered by the War Department, there were a considerable number of discharges without honor issued by subordinate military authorities under paragraph 148 of the Army Regulations, "where the service has not been honest and faithful—that is, where the service does not warrant reenlistment."

So much for the military side of the case. But I wish to say something additional, from the standpoint of the race question. In my message at the opening of Congress I discussed the matter of lynching. In it I gave utterance to the abhorrence which all decent citizens should feel for the deeds of the men (in almost all cases white men) who take part in lynchings, and at the same time I condemned, as all decent men of any color should condemn, the action of those colored men who actively or passively shield the colored criminal from the law. In the case of these companies we have to deal with men who in the first place were guilty of what was practically the worst possible form of lynching—for a lynching is in its essence lawless and murderous vengeance taken by an armed mob for real or fancied wrongs—and who in the second place covered up the crime of lynching by standing with a vicious solidarity to protect the criminals.

It is of the utmost importance to all our people that we shall deal with each man on his merits as a man, and not deal with him merely as a member of a given race; that we shall judge each man by his conduct and not his color. This is important for the white man, and it is far more important for the colored man. More evil and sinister counsel never was given to any people than that given to colored men by those advisers, whether black or white, who, by apology and condonation, encourage conduct such as that of the three companies in question. If the colored men elect to stand by criminals of their own race because they are of their own race, they assuredly lay up for themselves the most dreadful day of reckoning. Every farsighted friend of the colored race in its efforts to strive onward and upward, should teach first, as the most important lesson, alike to the white man and the black, the duty of treating the individual man strictly on his worth as he shows it. Any conduct by colored people which tends to substitute for this rule the rule of standing by and shielding an evil doer because he is a member of their race, means the inevitable degradation of the colored race. It may and probably does mean damage to the white race, but it means ruin to the black race.

Throughout my term of service in the Presidency I have acted on the principle thus advocated. In the North as in the South I have appointed colored men of high character to office, utterly disregarding the protests of those who would have kept them out of office because they were colored men. So far as was in my power, I have sought to secure for the colored people all their rights under the law. I have done all I could to secure them equal school training when young, equal opportunity to earn their livelihood, and achieve their happiness when old. I have striven to break up peonage; I have upheld the hands of those who, like Judge Jones and Judge Speer, have warred against this peonage, because I would hold myself unfit to be President if I did not feel the same revolt at wrong done a colored man as I feel at wrong done a white man. I have condemned in unstinted terms the crime of lynching perpetrated by white men, and I should take instant advantage of any opportunity whereby I could bring to justice a mob of lynchers. In precisely the same spirit I have now acted with reference to these colored men who have been guilty of a black and dastardly crime. In one policy, as in the other, I do not claim as a favor, but I challenge as a right, the support of every citizen of this country, whatever his color, provided only he has in him the spirit of genuine and far-sighted patriotism.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 19, 1906.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the message, with the accompanying exhibits and all papers connected therewith, may be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to take such testimony as may be necessary to establish all the facts, the expense so incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The last part ought to be a separate resolution. The usual motion is, of course, that the message be referred and printed, to which there is no objection, but I think before we decide to enter on a Congressional investigation the matter ought to be presented at least separately.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to presenting it separately, if the Senator makes an objection. I ask the Senator if he objects to testimony being taken in regard to the facts in the matter?

Mr. LODGE. If a resolution of investigation is to be introduced, I ask that it may go over under the rule.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator would, upon consideration, perhaps, withdraw that objection. The documents accompanying the message are very voluminous. It is impossible for us on the moment to determine whether all the evidence is there with respect to this matter that the Senate may desire to have, if it should see fit to go into the matter at all. The request I made was that the message might go to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to take testimony if the committee should deem it essential or advisable to do so.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the motion be divided.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. I want to know if my request is objected to.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Ohio. He is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Can not the matter be safely left to that committee? If they conclude to investigate this matter and want any further power from the Senate, they can come into the Senate later on with such a proposition. It does not seem to me that any formal resolution to empower the Military Committee to send for witnesses or papers is necessary at this time. Let the committee take up the matter.

I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he confine his request to having the documents printed, which of course will be printed as a Senate document, and then have the Committee on Military Affairs take up the matter at their discretion.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the objection that is made, I will divide the request, or motion, rather.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I shall ask the Senator from Ohio to reduce his motion to writing, not the first motion of reference, but the second motion, in order that we may understand whether it be the purpose of the Senator from Ohio to instruct and direct the Military Affairs Committee of the Chamber to make an investigation, or whether it be simply his purpose to leave it to the committee to determine whether an investigation shall be made.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I will offer a written resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the President's message, with the accompanying documents, be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, I offer a resolution. I will first yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, however.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that there has come in a message which we have only just heard read, and that there comes with it a considerable amount of printed testimony, which I for one should like to examine. I am not at all clear whether there is any necessity for entering upon a Congressional investigation. If there is, we will order it; but I should like to see the papers first.

Mr. FORAKER. I will offer the resolution in a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will take this opportunity to lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 22580. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 121. An act authorizing the extension of Seventeenth street NW.;

H. R. 128. An act for the opening of a connecting highway between Waterside Drive and Park road, District of Columbia;

H. R. 5971. An act authorizing the extension of T street (formerly W street) NW.;

H. R. 7039. An act authorizing the extension of Prospect street NW.;

H. R. 8435. An act for the opening of Fessenden street NW., District of Columbia;

H. R. 10703. An act authorizing the extension of Monroe street NE.;

H. R. 10843. An act authorizing the extension of Kenyon street NW.;

H. R. 14815. An act for the extension of Harvard street, Columbia Heights, District of Columbia; and

H. R. 14900. An act to extend Fourth street NE.

OPENING OF MACOMB STREET.

The bill (H. R. 20069) for the opening of Macomb street NW., District of Columbia, was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. A bill in reference to the opening of Macomb street has been reported by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia and is on the Calendar. I ask that the House bill may take the place of the Senate bill on the Calendar without reference to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 21408) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906, was read the first time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair invites the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the bill. The Chair understands that there is a Senate bill of the same character on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is, and I ask that this bill take the place on the Calendar that is now held by the Senate bill. It is in identical terms.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate bill, No. 6405, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take but a moment, I will say, to pass the House bill, and it is a somewhat important matter. It is a small matter, but yet important. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "at least six months from the date of revocation of such license" the words "every violation of any provision of this act, except as provided in section 10, shall be punishable by a fine not to exceed $25, and in default thereof the person or persons so offending shall be committed for a period not to exceed thirty days, and this penalty shall also include such violations of section 10 for which no penalty is prescribed in said section 10.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That if the Committee on Military Affairs deem it necessary, in connection with the consideration of the message of the President in response to resolutions Nos. 180 and 181, to take further testimony to establish all facts connected with the discharge of the members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise, the expense so incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, to that resolution I have no objection at all. What I objected to was passing a resolution ordering an investigation before we get any opportunity to consider the papers that have come in. The resolution leaves it to the discretion of the Committee on Military Affairs to take action or not, as they may deem best, after examining the papers, and I have no objection to it. I hope it will pass.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to add only one word, and that is that the resolution is in the precise form in which I undertook to offer the resolution orally.

Mr. LODGE. I misunderstood the language the Senator used, then. I thought it was a direction to investigate.

Mr. FORAKER. I had not thought of ordering an investigation until the message and accompanying documents should be properly examined by some committee, and I thought the Committee on Military Affairs was the proper one.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose the resolution, but simply to call the attention of my colleague on the committee to the fact that it is usual when authorizing a committee to take testimony, etc., which would cause expense to have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I do not raise the point myself.

Mr. LODGE. That would not be necessary at this stage, because the resolution leaves it to the Committee on Military Affairs to say whether there shall be an investigation or not, and it is for them then to decide.

Mr. WARREN. But the resolution undertakes to give them authority to expend money. I have no objection to its passage in that form. I merely call attention to the fact that it is unusual.

Mr. KEAN. The whole quesion has to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, under the law.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, there is objection to leaving it to the discretion of the committee without a positive order of the Senate to undertake an investigation of this sort. It seems to me that if an investigation of the kind is to be undertaken it ought not to be done except on an express instruction from the Senate to do so. I do not believe it is a good idea to leave it to a committee to undertake what may be a very long and burdensome and costly investigation unless it has been directly instructed by the Senate to do so. I would be willing at this time to instruct the committee to make such an investigation, but I do not believe in leaving it to the discretion of the committee to conduct an investigation of this sort.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Let the resolution be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution, at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary again read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That if the Committee on Military Affairs deem it necessary, in connection with the consideration of the message of the President in response to resolutions Nos. 180 and 181, to take further testimony to establish all facts connected with the discharge of the members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise, the expense so incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I modify the resolution, in view of the objection that has been made, so as to omit the words "the expense so incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate," and I ask that it may be passed as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the President's message has just come into the Senate. It is voluminous and contains many pages. Senators ought to be permitted to examine closely the message and the testimony connected therewith before we vote as to whether there ought to be an investigation. I do not believe that, without an examination of the testimony in connection with the message, discretion should be left to a committee as to whether or not there shall be an investigation. I can not see how any harm can result to anyone by leaving this matter to stand until after we convene again in January; and I object to the consideration of the resolution to-day.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the modification of the resolution which has been made, no testimony can be taken until the matter is acted upon by the Senate. So I hope the Senator from Georgia will withdraw his objection. He will be perfectly protected. The only request is that the message shall be printed as a Senate document so that all Senators can examine it, and——

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FORAKER. If the committee upon examining it——

Mr. CLAY. I understood that the Senator offered a resolution of that kind, and that it has been already adopted.

Mr. FORAKER. That has been adopted.

Mr. CLAY. And I understand this second resolution to leave it to the discretion of the committee as to whether or not there shall be an investigation of the entire subject.

Mr. FORAKER. If they want any additional testimony. As has been stated, there have been some statements sent here—some of them under oath, many of them not under oath—which are referred to as the testimony taken in this case. In a proper sense of the word there is no testimony at all, but it is to that I refer when I speak of the testimony upon which action so far has been taken.

Now, if the Senator insists upon his objection, I move to reconsider the motion referring the message, with the accompanying documents, to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ask that it be printed as a document and lie on the table, to be called up for discussion whenever it may suit the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the resolution as amended by the Senator from Ohio be read, that I may thoroughly understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Ohio will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That if the Committee on Military Affairs deem it necessary, in connection with the consideration of the message of the President in response to resolutions Nos. 180 and 181, to take further testimony to establish all facts connected with the discharge of the members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CLAY. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia objects. The Senator from Ohio moves to reconsider the vote by which the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not wish to precipitate a discussion at this time of the message the President has sent. I think every Senator here would be at a disadvantage in undertaking to discuss it until he has had time to read it carefully. I have read it once, and I have heard it read from the desk by the Secretary. So possibly I am more familiar with it than any other Senator here. I do not think any other Senator has read it. And yet I do not feel like undertaking to discuss the message at this time, but I think it is due to Senators who may want to discuss it, if it can not be considered in committee, where it properly belongs, that it should lie on the table until it can be called up and discussed or be sent to the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Sending papers to a committee is merely a formal process. It does not deprive us of the papers or of the message; and the subject is before us under the resolution, which goes over by the objection of the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Ohio does not, it seems to me, lose any control of the subject by allowing the papers to take the ordinary course, which is the reference to a committee and printing.

Mr. FORAKER. That is all true, and it is in recognition of that fact that I did not think there would be any objection on the part of the Senator from Georgia, when he saw what I want to call attention to now—the qualified form of the resolution. I did not think the Senator would insist upon his objection when he saw the modified form of the resolution. There could not be any testimony taken until the Senate acted on the question of expenses, and I so stated.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to yield, because the Senator wants to make a motion for an executive session; otherwise I would be courteous and polite and yield to the Senator. I would like to have this matter disposed of if I can. I do not see that there is any advantage or disadvantage to anybody whether the resolution goes over or not, except only we get rid of it for the time being, and it goes to the committee where it properly belongs and where it will have to be considered in any event.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator that I do not desire to be captious about the matter, but I do desire to read the message of the President. That can be done. Senators will have time to read the message by to-morrow, and then will be the proper time to act on the resolution. I can not see any need of immediate action to-day. I can not see how——

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly, if the Senator insists upon it, I will let it go over until to-morrow, because I can not help myself. Under the rule I shall have to yield.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. I was hoping the Senator would withdraw his objection. If he insists upon it the resolution will go over until to-morrow, but to-morrow I shall press the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio insist on his motion to reconsider the vote by which the message and documents were referred?

Mr. FORAKER. I was referring to the resolution when I said in view of the objection of the Senator from Georgia I would, of course, have to allow it to go over until to-morrow; but I ask that the same order may be taken as to the motion to reconsider. I enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CULLOM. I insist upon my motion, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the President's message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The motion will lie over until to-morrow; and pending the motion to reconsider, the message and accompanying documents will be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 20, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 19, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SHOSHONE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21202) fixing the time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill was read yesterday. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

INTERSTATE CORPORATIONS.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2) requiring all corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill. Is it on the Union Calendar?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. It appears to be on the House Calendar. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is that the gentleman's request?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. On what calendar is that bill, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It appears to be on the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN. That bill is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It does not seem to be.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. That bill was transferred from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar nearly a year ago.

The SPEAKER. On examination the Chair finds that is correct. The Clerk informs the Chair that the bill has been transferred from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar. The Chair only looked at the front page of the bill, which states that it was referred to the House Calendar on January 13, 1906, and ordered to be printed. The Clerk informs the Chair that on January 29, 1906, a few days after its reference to the House Calendar, it was transferred to the Union Calendar. The Chair does not recollect, but supposes there is something in it that makes a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The request for unanimous consent is——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will put an end to the controversy by objecting, if it takes unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 2.

Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order that the motion is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is on the ground that the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

S. 4267. An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors near the Government Hospital for the Insane and the District almshouse—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22584. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House resolution 647, the resolution making distribution of the President's message.

A MEMBER. Which message? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. The annual message.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I desire to present a report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. PAYNE. I will withdraw the motion, and give way to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withholds his motion for the present.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following resolution, reported favorably from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills is hereby authorized to appoint an additional clerk to said committee, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day for the remainder of the present Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is this a privileged resolution?

Mr. CASSEL. It is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this resolution what action has been taken to ascertain who was responsible for the carelessness and neglect of the Committee on Enrolled Bills in their work in the last session of Congress?

Mr. CASSEL. I will yield to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to make a statement about that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the Committee on Printing of the two Houses, after the adjournment of the last session, made a thorough investigation and have reported to their respective Houses the facts and their conclusions and recommendations. Their report has been printed in the RECORD.

The responsibility for the mistakes is located, as nearly as I can gather from this report, in the enrolling room of the House and with the Enrolling Committee, and the principal cause of it is the fact that there is a lack of sufficient employees in the enrolling room to do the work properly and to exercise as much care as should be exercised in the discharge of this important work. They recommend an assistant enrolling clerk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I read the report to which the gentleman from Minnesota refers, but I was unable to ascertain just where the committee that investigated intended to place the blame. Since the mistake for which this investigation was had was discovered, as the gentleman from Iowa knows, it has been ascertained that there were two other serious mistakes made in the last session in the enrolling room. One was not discovered until after Congress adjourned, and the other during the present session, when a bill was in preparation for the consideration of the House. If any work should be properly performed it should be the work that is done by the Committee on Enrolled Bills. This House is entitled to have the bills properly enrolled and have enacted into law what Congress intends to be placed upon the statute book. I hope that if the additional employee is to be given some care will be exercised in the choice, so that such mistakes will not happen again.

Mr. TAWNEY. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I share with him in what he says respecting the responsibility of the Committee on Enrolled Bills and the clerks employed in the enrolling room. I think it is one of the most responsible positions connected with the House. As a matter of fact, as the gentleman from New York has stated, there were two mistakes in addition to the one discovered after the President had signed the sundry civil bill. One of the other two was in the sundry civil bill and the other was in the fortification bill. But here were the conditions: The conference committees on the various appropriation bills, whether necessarily or not, delayed reaching a final agreement until the last few days of the session. Then the conference reports, the final agreements, came into the enrolling room all together, and with them came the public building bill and the appropriation bill providing for some of the work authorized under the public building bill. The enrolling clerk, the chief of the enrolling room, worked forty-eight hours continuously, as testified by the Clerk of the House and by the gentleman himself before this commission. He worked continuously for forty-eight hours in the discharge of this responsible and important duty, and the Clerk of the House as well as the Committee on Printing now say that if they can get an assistant enrolling clerk it will enable them to do the work, do it efficiently, without any danger of errors in the future.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman from Minnesota will pardon me, the gentleman should understand that this resolution we are now considering is not to give an additional assistant to the enrolling room, but the ordinary resolution passed at every session of Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought this was to give an additional clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. CASSEL. No; this is the usual resolution that is offered during every session of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then that is all the more reason why the attention of the House should be called to what has happened. We have discovered three errors, and how many more have been made no one knows.

We know that $3,150,000 was incorporated in a bill that was never intended to be appropriated by Congress. So far as I know, nobody has made any investigation to ascertain whether other mistakes have been made and whether there is now upon the statutes laws authorizing expenditures never made by Congress. I am of the opinion that the enrolling room needs some shaking up. Somebody should be charged with the duty of knowing that the work there is done accurately and correctly that these mistakes will not happen.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, instead of the committee being subject to criticism, it seems to me that the House ought to take a measure of the responsibility upon itself. We are now about to adjourn for two weeks, so that no business will be done during that time, so that the last few days of the session, in the few short hours that remain, we may work night and day and accomplish in three or four days that which we ought to take a month to do. That has been the custom of this Congress for time immemorial, and we dump into the Committee on Enrolled Bills work that ought to be spread through weeks and weeks, at the very close of the session. I do not know that there is any way to remedy this, but it is unfair for gentlemen about to go home and take a two weeks' vacation, knowing that the result will be to throw a vast amount of business into the enrolling room during the last forty-eight hours of the session, to complain that the committee, working twenty-four hours a day, is unable to do the work accurately and correctly. The wonder is that there have not been more mistakes made in the office of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa is aware of the fact that these mistakes took place in a session that lasted seven months, and in which there was ample time to do the work.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; and the gentleman will remember that we fixed the time for adjournment and bunched this work altogether at the last minute even in the long session, as we will be compelled to do now in the short session; so that, after all, the putting of all these great bills into the committee with conference reports, with hundreds of items in dispute, a few of them agreed on and a few others carried forward, necessitates, after the hour of adjournment is fixed, the enrollment of a bill in advance. They have to enroll the bill at the Printing Office. They enroll the bill as they expect it to be the law, and then take out the sheets containing controverted items at the last moment and correct them and enroll them as the conference committees finally report them to the two Houses. The result is that now and then one of the things that is supposed to have been agreed upon has been overlooked in this rush and crush of business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know of any other instance where errors similar to this have happened? I have been here eight years, and I have no recollection of such errors happening in the enrolling room, either in the long or the short session.

Mr. LACEY. And there could be no greater compliment to the Enrolling Committee than what the gentleman now says, that with all this stress of business, with all of this rush of work at the last moment, these mistakes are all that he remembers to have occurred. I say it is to the credit of that committee, and instead of the committee being criticised we ought to really wonder and thank them that no more errors have occurred.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the gentleman can take that consolation if he wishes to, but I do not think it will satisfy the rest of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. How is the committee going to assume what the bill will be in advance?

Mr. LACEY. They have the bill as it has passed the House, and they print the sheets in that form, and then if changes are made they take those sheets out. By printing separate sheets they can take them out where the conference committee has changed them and the report has been agreed upon and then print them in accordance with the ultimate agreement. Otherwise they would never get the bill enrolled in time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. CASSEL. For a few moments; yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it does not seem to me that there can be any complaint because the engrossing room asks for additional help. I doubt very much whether the help now proposed is sufficient. At the last session of Congress, although as suggested by our distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the session lasted seven months, there was bunched in together within the last day of Congress a very large proportion of the bills which became laws. Included in these was the sundry civil appropriation bill. Having been engrossed in the House, it was sent to the Senate. It was passed by the Senate and went into conference. No one could tell until the conferees finally reported exactly what would be in the bill in the end, and yet I remember sitting here in the House, and the House adjourning for a few moments or for a few hours at a time, and every Member of the House insisting that this bill should be hurried back from the committee and from the enrolling room and from the Printing Office, laying the blame, not upon themselves, but upon the people who had charge of preparing the papers; and the men in charge of that, anticipating the very thing that happened, as far as criticism was concerned, made the mistake in the way of enrolling the bill in advance. Everything had been agreed upon except two items. They enrolled the bill in that shape, intending to take out the sheet containing those two items and reprint it. How it got by them no one can tell, except to say that while Congress is now proposing to pass a law forbidding railway employees from working more than sixteen hours a day, these men had been on continuous service for more than forty-eight hours without sleep.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, one error that was made was not made under such circumstances. If I recollect, the fortifications bill was agreed to some time before Congress adjourned, and the leaving out of a part of the bill made it impossible to expend an appropriation that was intended for the Philippine Islands in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman misunderstands me. I am not defending the mistakes that were made in the bill. I do not think it ought to be possible for these mistakes to creep in, and for that reason I think Congress ought to provide a sufficient force to do the work properly. Now, I would go much further than has been suggested here in one respect. There ought to be a pneumatic-tube service between the Capitol and the Printing Office. It is perfect folly for us to be sitting here in the closing days of a session while a messenger boy is going back and forth with the printing between the Capitol and the Printing Office, because all of this work has to be enrolled. We ought to be able to shoot it back and forth in a minute. That would save a great deal of time. If we want perfect service rendered by these people, we must provide them with the proper tools and a sufficient number of men so that there can be some relay. I do not pretend to excuse the mistake that was made, but it is our fault, in the first place, that we did not provide them sufficient help, and we ought to do that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for the services of an enrolling clerk a sum equal to the rate of $3,000 per annum and for the services of an additional assistant enrolling clerk a sum equal to $1,800 per annum, payable, respectively, in equal monthly installments until their compensation at the rates herein authorized shall be provided for by law: Provided, That the enrolling clerk for whose services payment out of the contingent fund of the House is hereby authorized shall be in lieu of the enrolling clerk at $2,500 now authorized by law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order and want to ask the gentleman a question. What is this about?

Mr. CASSEL. The resolution which has been passed is the usual resolution granting to the Committee on Enrolled Bills an additional clerk. Later in the session we will have to give them another clerk. These clerks are only for the session. This resolution is to increase the salary of the clerk under the Clerk of the House and give him an additional clerk in the enrolling room, so that the mistakes which occurred a year ago will not be repeated. The work in that room is so great that in order to protect the House they need the additional employees.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, this resolution is the one I endeavored to explain a few moments ago in regard to the necessity for this increased force in the enrolling room.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did we not just pass a resolution giving an extra clerk?

Mr. CASSEL. That is for the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is this?

Mr. CASSEL. This is for the enrolling room, which is a permanent organization. It is part of the permanent organization of the House.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, the enrolling clerk enrolls a bill in the first instance——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. Then it is passed over to the Committee on Enrolled Bills to make a comparison, and they examine it again, and this is to increase that force. One resolution increases one force and the other resolution increases another.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The resolution we just passed increases the force in the enrolling clerk's office?

Mr. MANN. No; that increases the force of the Enrolling Committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, this one increases the force——

Mr. TAWNEY. In the enrolling room.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And the Congressional remedy for everything is to raise somebody's salary or create a new office with a new salary.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; if the gentleman will pardon me, the Enrolling Committee operates as a check upon the enrolling room. Now, the system they have to insure accuracy and to avoid, if possible, mistakes, is, first, the bill is enrolled and compared in the enrolling room to which this resolution relates. It then goes to the Committee on Enrolled Bills and is there compared for the purpose of catching any mistakes that may be made in the enrolling room.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask you a leading question. Does this Committee on Enrolled Bills ever pay any attention at all to a bill which is sent to them?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly. It has to do it. The clerks of that committee must do it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What does the committee do?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know what it does.

Mr. MANN. The committee works through its clerks.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Nobody works but the clerks, and they work all day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I could not understand what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said, but this resolution proposes to create a new clerk.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is to-day a chief enrolling clerk, and the chief enrolling clerk must be there all the time, and, as I stated when on the floor a moment ago, during the last forty-eight hours of the session he was here night and day serving continuously because of that fact, and it frequently happens during the session that he is obliged to remain here long into the night. It is proposed to give him an assistant, and, as I am advised by the Clerk of the House, with this assistance it will be absolutely impossible, except in case of gross negligence, for any mistake to occur; that they absolutely need this assistant to the chief clerk in the enrolling room no one who will take the trouble to look into the matter will question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who controls the time on this?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASSEL].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to have a minute or two myself.

Mr. CASSEL. How much time does the gentleman from Missouri desire?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Five minutes to start with.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the fact that Congress at each session is passing more bills. The work of the enrolling room is increasing constantly by reason of the increased number of bills that are passed by Congress, all of which have to be enrolled.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I take it that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] knows a good deal about this business, but I do not believe that this increase ought to take place because somebody had to work two or three days and nights without stopping at the end of the session.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me for interrupting him right there, would it not be economy, even if we had to pay a man an annual salary for the purpose of having him there to perform this work properly during the last few days of the session, when it is possible under the present organization for mistakes of that kind to occur whereby $3,000,000 is appropriated in one single item because of the want of sufficient help in the enrolling room?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have not the slightest assurance that if you created this additional clerkship the work would be done one particle better than it is now.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have the assurance of the chief clerk of the enrolling room and also the Clerk of the House of Representatives that it will be done in an entirely efficient manner if this additional force is added. And I would say to the gentleman that every Member of the House, and especially every Member of the House who is on conference reports concerning appropriation bills, is vitally interested in having these bills enrolled properly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Everybody is interested in having these bills enrolled properly. There is no controversy about that. I started to say a while ago that it seemed to me that it was a poor reason to give for the creation of this clerkship that certain clerks had to work, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated, at the end of the session, forty-eight hours without any stop. We work forty-eight hours without any rest at the end of the session, too, but nobody ever proposed that our compensation should be increased for that reason, and if it had been proposed it would have been absolutely preposterous.

Mr. MANN. So far as the increase of compensation is concerned, I do not care to discuss it with the gentleman at all. So far as the increase of help is concerned, if the gentleman has any doubt about that I would like to make a statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know what it is that the gentleman is going to say.

Mr. MANN. The point is that at the end of the session, even if that be the case, although that is not the only time they need this extra help, the increase of help is not for the purpose of keeping a man from working forty-eight hours on his account, but to keep him from working forty-eight hours on our account, when he is unable after that length of time of doing good service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The sensible solution of the problem is, as I believe it to be, that these clerks do not have very much to do——

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait a minute now until I finish. I said I believe these clerks do not have very much to do, except right at the end of the session; then everything is dumped in on them and they have an extraordinary stunt to perform. Now, the sensible way to cure that, instead of creating a new annual clerk who is only going to be busy about forty-eight hours at the end of the session, is to draft a lot of clerks around here who have nothing to do at the end of the session, put them in there, and set them to work.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to have a set of inexperienced clerks work over the accuracy of an enrolled bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not believe those clerks are experts.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is certainly not going to take that position.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is exactly my position.

Mr. MANN. The enrolling clerk of the House of Representatives and the enrolling clerk of the Senate, I dare say, have not their equals in the world. They are experts in making comparisons and making them accurately.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Those two men may be experts. I do not deny that.

Mr. MANN. That is what we want.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait a minute. They do not do the final work of preparing these bills?

Mr. MANN. Certainly they do the final work of comparing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman undertake to say that two men enroll all these bills and do the writing?

Mr. MANN. None of the bills are written. I will say to the gentleman that the enrollment of the bills is done at the Printing Office. They are all printed. The enrolled bill is not written.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What have they to do, then?

Mr. MANN. They have to make a comparison of the conference report and the bill. When a committee of conference comes in they have to go over the report of the committee of conference more carefully than the Members of the House have and ascertain exactly what is left out and what left in, and to have that put into the form of law, which we do not do.

Mr. KEIFER. They furnish the copy to the Printing Office?

Mr. MANN. They furnish the copy to the Printing Office. They make up the bill. They take the conference report and say take out of such and such a page such and such words or lines. It is impossible for Members of the House who are not expert to go through the report after it comes in and say what is left out of a bill and what is left in.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Members of Congress can not do it, how can these clerks do it?

Mr. MANN. Because they are experts. An expert Member of the House, the gentleman from Missouri, might do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one remark, and that is that one of the suggestions that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] made is the most sensible, in my judgment, that he has made since I have been in Congress, for twelve years [laughter]; and that was the idiocy of having this two weeks' vacation during the short session of Congress. The rest of his remarks I do not think were, in point of wisdom, to be compared with that one. [Laughter.] In the first place, he is mistaken about his facts. At the last session of Congress the time to adjourn was never agreed on until just a few minutes before Congress adjourned. There was a sort of understanding around here that we were going to adjourn early in the day of the 30th of June; the idea being that we would adjourn in time to give everybody a chance to get away that day, and everybody wanted to get away, because it was dreadfully hot; and we would have gotten away if it had not been for this enrolling committee making these mistakes or the Printing Office.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now let me correct the gentleman from Missouri in his facts. He is mistaken in the statement that the enrollment of the bills caused the delay. The delay was made necessary because of the work incident to the enrollment of the public building bill and the appropriation bill required to carry out the authorizations in the public building bill, and the delay was not due to the mistakes of which he speaks.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And they managed to get in the public building bill at least $3,000,000 that Congress never appropriated.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was not in that bill. That $3,000,000 was in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They got it in anyhow.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The most objectionable appropriation that was suggested to the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. But it did not cause any delay because the bill had been enrolled and signed by the President when the mistake was discovered. Immediately I introduced a resolution repealing that provision.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. But that did not occasion any delay. The delay was caused by the enrollment of the public building bill which this House passed on the 29th of June, or rather, I should say, the morning of the 30th of June, and they had to enroll this bill, and notwithstanding the changes made in conference there were no mistakes in it.

Mr. PAYNE. And also the separate appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. And also the separate appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There has been a row just exactly like this going on in every Congress periodically ever since the gentleman from Minnesota and myself came into Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. And before.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And I suppose before, as the gentleman from Ohio says, and he knows.

Mr. OLMSTED. And probably will be after you quit.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I believe there would not be if we would adopt a sensible plan. Finally, Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, my recollection is, proposed as a panacea for all these ills that they be allowed to print the enrolled copy of the bill instead of writing it, and we thought we had reached a solution of the whole question. Now, you come in here with as bad a muddle as you ever had before, and the only remedy anybody seems to have sense enough to suggest is to create a new office or to raise a salary, which will not do any good at all. The man who gets the place will draw the salary with regularity and enthusiasm, while we will have just the same number of delays and mistakes as in the past or as at present.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman came into Congress the Journal of the House made a book about half as large as the volume which I hold in my hand. The other day the gentleman received, and if he has opened it he knows——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I have opened it.

Mr. MANN. A package containing a Journal of the last session of Congress considerably larger than the volume which I hold in my hand. Now, that is a record of business and not of talk.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This Committee on Enrolled Bills do not have anything to do with the Journal.

Mr. MANN. No; but they have a great deal to do with the work recorded in the Journal. That Journal means a large number of bills passed. All of those bills went through the hands of this committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not believe the number of bills passed has increased within my time here nearly as much as the number of speeches.

Mr. MANN. There is a great deal more talk, but there are also a great many more bills. It is fortunate that the Committee on Enrolled Bills does not have to compare the speeches.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No. I wish they did have to, because then there would not be so many speeches made.

Mr. MANN. But they have to compare all the bills, and the increase in the amount of business in the House of Representatives is shown by the difference in the size of the volumes containing the Journal. The Journal of the last session of this Congress was probably the largest Journal of any legislative body ever published. That represents not talk, but business—bills passed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The remedy for this whole matter is to have the short session of Congress lengthened, either by cutting out the Christmas holidays or in some other way. I understand that people have to go home sometimes to look after their private affairs, but to grant two weeks every year regularly for a Christmas holiday is a sort of childish performance.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to interrupt the gentleman. This seems to be a free go.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Just wait until I finish this statement and then I will be glad to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I will borrow some more time then.

Mr. CASSEL. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unquestionably the short session of Congress must be lengthened. It is getting so that the necessary business can not be transacted in the seventy-five or eighty working days that we have. The session could be lengthened ten or twelve days by cutting out this Christmas holiday performance, or it could be lengthened by setting the day of meeting earlier.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Did you ever vote against the resolution to adjourn over the Christmas holidays?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I always do. I never go home during the Christmas holidays.

Mr. PAYNE. I know; but did you ever vote against the resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes. I always vote against that, and I vote against these appropriation bills. Nobody ever runs against me for the nomination, so I do not have to be going backwards and forwards to my district all the time.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman must vote sotto voce, because the sound of his vote fails to reach this side of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then there is another suggestion that would help things amazingly. There ought to be a rule here that no general appropriation bill should be passed within five days of the end of the session. If we had that time, then we would have them considered and there would not be such a rush. You and I both know how it is. Every unseemly job that is passed by this House is done under compulsion—that is the truth about it—by being loaded onto these general appropriation bills right at the end of the session, when we must pass them or have an extraordinary session of Congress. It is a disgrace to the American Congress, the way that we pass appropriation bills toward the end of the session.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Missouri will pardon me for interrupting him, he has made the statement that "unseemly jobs" are crowded into the appropriation bills in the last hours of the session.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I say that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman specify any "unseemly job" that he has seen passed in the closing hours of a session since he has been in Congress?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That $3,000,000 grab was an "unseemly job."

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; that did not get into the appropriation bill at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was in the appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not by the action of Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I will hunt up a few of them here some day and make a speech about them.

Mr. TAWNEY. Before the gentleman makes a charge as serious as that against the Congress of the United States he ought to have some facts upon which to base it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman wants the facts I will dig them up and bring in an array of appropriations that ought never to have been made.

Mr. TAWNEY. We would like to see them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Minnesota knows them as well as I do. He has been here as long as I have.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are appropriations that ought not to have been made in your judgment and perhaps in mine.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has not the gentleman seen items of appropriation passed by this House incorporated into a bill that the House was against?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not say that I have.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then the gentleman has not been observing half as closely as he has the reputation of observing things around here. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I can state to the gentleman one instance where I think the House was, perhaps, to a certain extent coerced into accepting an amendment to an appropriation, put in at the other end of the Capitol. That was on the last night of the session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, as I recall it, and that is the only one that I do now recollect. I think that came from South Carolina.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, let that go. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Missouri is referring to appropriations for town fairs that get into the appropriation bills and are crowded through by a majority vote of the House. I am not sure but that the gentleman from Missouri votes for them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I will be perfectly frank about that. There are certain events in the history of our country that ought to be celebrated by the Congress of the United States, and the Louisiana purchase was one of them; and there are five or six along that line. I voted for the appropriation for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and I have been paying to Members the debt incurred on that occasion ever since, and I am not through with it yet. [Laughter.] But the gentleman from New York has not any particular vantage ground in a controversy of that kind when you remember the exposition at Buffalo. [Laughter.] That didn't celebrate anything that ever I heard of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Except that it was the domicile of the original buffalo. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I always pay my debts. I am going to vote for the Jamestown performance, whatever they want, and I think when I get through with that item I am out of debt to all Members of Congress on account of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

Mr. PAYNE. That will be an event worthy of celebration. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think it will be. I think so myself. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER]. I want to say before I sit down that I am just as anxious to have the bills enrolled correctly as anybody in the House, but I do not believe this thing will remedy it a particle.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to make any extended speech. I think we ought to recur occasionally in this discussion to the object that was sought to be gained by the resolution. There have some errors crept into the statements made; we are all responsible for them. It is not exactly true that all the bills enrolled are printed in their enrollment. The Enrolling Committee and the enrolling clerk write a great many of the short bills, as they did in former times, but the Printing Office helps them to enroll the larger or longer bills.

I arose, however, to say that the exigency for the passage of this resolution lies in the fact that we have so many things concentrated in the last days and hours of each session, and we are never going to get over that. It will never be different. Twenty-five, thirty, and forty years ago there was the same trouble. If we can get careful experts who can work days and nights in the last hours of the session, we will avoid mistakes so far as it is possible to avoid them, and we should then have plenty of them. The mistake in the fortification bill in the last session was in writing in what had once been in the bill, putting it in the enrollment, and when I refer to that I want to say what I rose principally to say, that I want this House to get over the habit that has been recently established of repealing clauses written in the bill that were never passed upon by either House of Congress favorably. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY] said that he had the honor to introduce a provision to repeal the $3,000,000 error. What do you want to repeal the erroneous acts of the clerks of the Enrolling Committee for? If the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has any more such measures, he wants to state that his proposition is to repeal the provisions written in the bill by the clerk after the two Houses of Congress had ceased to legislate in relation to them. A provision written in a bill after both Houses have acted on it can not thus be made law, even though the bill containing the provision is signed by the Speaker and the Vice-President and is approved by the President of the United States. Laws can not thus be made.

That is the point I want to emphasize here so that we will have no more of this. I do not believe in jumping onto poor humanity that is wearied and worn down and tired out in the last hours of a session when an honest mistake occurs in the confusion of conference reports, and so on; and I believe in giving as ample force in the enrolling rooms as it is possible to provide, so that we will not have these serious errors occurring from session to session. They do not belong alone to the Fifty-ninth Congress. They are very old. Gentlemen complain, too, that we are getting too large Journals. Well, we are getting to be a large Congress and we have a large Congress. If you look to the number of bills that were introduced into the Fifty-ninth Congress within the first ten days of the first session, you will find that they outnumber all the bills of all character that were introduced in the first twenty-five Congresses of the United States. So have we grown with our diversified interests and the enlargement of our country into a situation that we must recognize ourselves and provide for.

I think the resolution ought to pass, and I would not haggle about one clerk or two clerks. At the right time we should have plenty of trained, experienced clerks, so that they may carefully revise the enrollment of all bills and see that no mistakes creep in.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the resolution this question. How much is the increase of salary to the present enrolling clerk?

Mr. CASSEL. Five hundred dollars.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, now, when you give him additional help, what reason is there for giving him also additional pay.

Mr. CASSEL. I would say that the pay this man is receiving now is the same pay which was given to the enrolling clerk when the membership of this House was 200. It is now almost 400. The number of bills introduced from the time his salary was made at $2,000 has increased almost 900 per cent, and the number of bills passed by this House has increased more than threefold since this man was appointed.

Mr. SHERLEY. You are giving him an additional man.

Mr. CASSEL. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And yet you also want to increase his salary.

Mr. CASSEL. Yes; we do it because we believe in the necessary increases of salary proportionate to a man's service and the times that we are living in.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CLARK of Missouri) there were—ayes 76, noes 28.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that a quorum is not present. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Eliza, Benjamin English, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, submitting its twentieth annual report—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on improvement of Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHERLEY, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17624) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 4405 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved March 3, 1905, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5625); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. EDWARDS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17634) granting an increase of pension to John S. Cochran, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5556); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1337) granting an increase of pension to James B. Evans, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5557); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20587) granting an increase of pension to Francis McMahon, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5558); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20654) granting an increase of pension to William A. Nichols, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5559); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20831) granting an increase of pension to James R. Dunlap, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5560); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20861) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Weigert, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5561); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20960) granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. Bickford, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5562); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21061) granting an increase of pension to James Collins, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5563); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21123) granting an increase of pension to Lawrence McHugh, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5564); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21264) granting an increase of pension to David J. Wise, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5565); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21303) granting an increase of pension to James Edward Bristol, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5566); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21335) granting an increase of pension to Harvey S. Nettleton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5567); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the resolution I offered yesterday, which is on the table, may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. FORAKER, as follows:

Resolved, That if the Committee on Military Affairs deem it necessary, in connection with the consideration of the message of the President in response to resolutions Nos. 180 and 181, to take further testimony to establish all facts connected with the discharge of the members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I said yesterday that I would rather not make any comment in response to the President's message until I had had an opportunity to study it carefully, and for that reason I was anxious to have it go, and go without objection, to the Committee on Military Affairs, where we might deal with it in that deliberate and careful way in which such an important matter should be considered. But after I left the Senate I reread the message of the President. I stated in the Senate that I had already been over it twice, once reading it and once following the Secretary as he read it. After I went home I read it again, and it occurred to me that it would not be out of place, inasmuch as we were compelled, by the objections made yesterday, to keep this matter before us for consideration, to make some remarks about it at this time.

I wish to say, in the first place, and I think Senators will bear me out in it, that I never deal in unqualifiedly positive statements unnecessarily, and I try always to avoid extravagance of speech in whatever I may see fit to say to my colleagues here in this body. I shall try particularly to be conservative and considerate in whatever I may say this morning.

With that in mind, let me say, in the first place, that a careful reading of the President's message has convinced me that, in my opinion—I may be mistaken, but in my opinion—he has misconceived, first, his constitutional powers with respect to the action he has taken concerning this battalion, and, in the second place, he has misconceived the testimony upon which his action is based. He states in his message:

I ordered the discharge of nearly all the members of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry by name, in the exercise of my constitutional power and in pursuance of what, after full consideration, I found to be my constitutional duty as Commander in Chief of the United States Army.

The constitutional power of the President as Commander in Chief is found in section 2 of Article II of the Constitution, and it reads, in part, as follows:

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia, etc.

I have read far enough. That is all that the Constitution says as to the constitutional powers of the President as Commander in Chief.

In section 8 of Article I of the Constitution it is provided as I shall read. I have a note of it, but I prefer to read from the Constitution itself. However, to save time I will read from my notes. Section 8 of Article I reads, in part, as follows:

The Congress shall have power * * * to raise and support armies; * * * to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

That is all that is applicable, and I confine myself in the reading to that.

Now, Mr. President, it must be apparent to anyone without any study that the constitutional power conferred upon the President of the United States as Commander in Chief is to command the Army, and the power conferred by the Constitution on the Congress is a power to raise the Army and to prescribe the laws and the rules whereby the Army shall be regulated. Nobody would pretend that the Congress had any power or that anybody else had any power over the President as the commander to direct the movement of troops, to say where they should be stationed in time of peace or how they should be directed against the enemy in time of war. He, in that particular, is absolute, without anybody to question his authority.

But, on the other hand, it seems to me, Mr. President, equally clear no one can question that the Congress has power to prescribe by law what rules and regulations shall govern the Army as to its organization, as to the size of the Army, its maximum, its minimum, as to the number of the infantry regiments, the number of cavalry regiments, the number of artillery regiments, and the number of batteries, and the number of men in each of these units of organization; and how, Mr. President, particularly, men shall be enlisted and men shall be discharged from the Army, the terms and conditions upon which they shall be enlisted, the rights that shall accrue to them on account of their service—long service, faithful service—whether or not they shall be recognized by the Government and be rewarded by the Government. All that rests with Congress as a part of that power. As a part of that power it is competent for the Congress of the United States to provide that no man shall be summarily discharged from the Army after he has been regularly enlisted except upon certain terms and conditions; that no man in the Army shall be found guilty of any offense with which he may be charged except after he has had an opportunity to appear before a tribunal where he can present his defense, where he can be represented in person and be represented by attorney, if he wants to be, or by some one else to speak for him; where he can confront his accusers and cross-examine their witnesses.

Now, Mr. President, with that as a preliminary, I desire to call attention to the fact that the Congress has most carefully considered this whole subject, and the Congress has with extreme care provided what the terms and conditions of enlistment shall be, what the obligations of an enlisted man shall be, under what conditions he may be discharged, whether he may be discharged dishonorably or whether he may be honorably discharged, and of recent years, by virtue of a regulation that was promulgated in 1895, which has been acquiesced in by Congress and may be said now to have the approval of law, whether he may be discharged without honor, as these men were. I call attention to the Articles of War. It is provided in the second of these articles as follows:

ARTICLE 2. These rules and articles shall be read to every enlisted man at the time of or within six days after his enlistment, and he shall thereupon take an oath or affirmation in the following form: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever, and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the rules and Articles of War." This oath may be taken before any commissioned officer of the Army.

So, Mr. President, the obligation which we are told these men violated when they declined to give testimony asked for and which the officers assumed they could give if they would tell what they knew, was an obligation to obey everything that might be commanded by their superiors, from the President down, which was commanded in accordance with the rules and Articles of War.

That is the first limitation. Stopping there, Mr. President, it must be evident to any careful student of this subject that it was not intended that the constitutional power of the President as Commander in Chief should be, especially in time of peace, without restraint, without restriction, without limitation, but, as the Constitution itself declares when it empowers Congress with respect to this subject, that it should be subject to such rules and regulations as the Congress might prescribe, and Congress has prescribed that the duty of the soldier shall be confined, in the obeying of orders, to that which is in harmony with the Articles of War.

Now, what do these Articles of War prescribe? I have them before me, but I took occasion to copy out the essence of those to which I wish next to call attention. It is provided in article 16 as follows. Let me say before I commence to read that I am going to read only the skeleton just to indicate the general nature of the provisions, and it will be found, when I have read all the provisions on the subject, that the Congress, specifically mentioning every kind of an offense, has carefully provided for the question how, in the event of the commission of such an offense, the soldier shall be found guilty of it. Commencing with article 16, it is as follows:

Any enlisted man who sells or willfully or through neglect wastes the ammunition delivered out to him shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

Article 17 provides that—

Any soldier who sells or through neglect loses or spoils his horse, arms, clothing, or accouterments shall be punished as a court-martial may adjudge.

Article 20 provides that any soldier showing disrespect to his commanding officer shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 21 provides:

Any soldier who strikes a superior officer shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

Article 22. Any soldier guilty of mutiny or sedition shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

In the President's message of yesterday we are officially informed that these men were guilty of mutiny, and he discharged them in the way he did because of the mutinous character of their conduct.

Article 24. Any soldier who refuses to obey an officer who is trying to suppress a quarrel or affray shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 26. Any soldier who challenges or accepts a challenge to fight a duel shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 31 provides:

Any soldier who lies out of his quarters, garrison, or camp without leave shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

Article 32. Any soldier who absents himself from his troops, etc., without leave shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 33. Any soldier who absents himself from parade without leave shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 34. Any soldier who is found 1 mile from camp without leave in writing shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 36. Any soldier who hires another to do his duty, instead of doing it himself, shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 38. Any officer found drunk on guard, etc., shall be dismissed from the service, but any soldier who so offends shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

The general provision is added to this section following:

No court-martial shall sentence any soldier to be branded, marked, or tattooed.

Article 39. Any sentinel found sleeping upon his post shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 40. Any soldier who quits his guard, platoon, or division without leave, except in a case of urgent necessity, shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 42. Any soldier who misbehaves before the enemy, etc., shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 47. Any soldier who deserts in time of war shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct," except that in time of peace the death penalty shall not be imposed.

Article 51. Any soldier who advises another to desert, etc., shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 55. All soldiers must behave themselves in quarters and on the march, and whoever commits any waste or spoil either in walks, or trees, parks, warrens, fish ponds, houses, gardens, grain fields, inclosures, or meadows, or maliciously destroys any property belonging to inhabitants of the United States shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 56. Any soldier who does violence to any person bringing provisions, etc., to the camp shall be punished "as a court-martial may direct."

Article 59 provides that—

When any officer or soldier is accused of a capital crime or of any offense against the person or property of any citizen of any of the United States which is punishable by the laws of the land, the commanding officer and the officers of the regiment, troop, battery, etc., to which the person so accused belongs are required, except in time of war, * * * to deliver them up to the civil magistrate.

Article 60 provides that any person in the military service of the United States, who makes or causes to be made any false claim, or enters into any agreement or agreements to defraud the United States, or who makes or uses any false paper to defraud the United States, or who commits perjury in support of any false claim against the United States, or who commits forgery in such behalf, or who delivers less property than a receipt calls for, or who gives receipts without knowing the truth recited in them, or who sells, embezzles, etc., or who buys any military property from any soldier, officer, or other person, the party selling not having lawful right to sell or pledge the same, shall, on conviction, be punished "as a court-martial may adjudge."

I come now to article 62. I have already pointed out how specifically and carefully every kind of an offense that the lawmaking power could foresee that it was likely a soldier would commit was provided for; and in every instance the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of its constitutional power, has said there shall be no summary, no arbitrary, no autocratic exercise of power by way of conviction or punishment as for a penalty, but there shall be a trial by a court-martial, and the punishment shall be such as the court-martial may direct.

Then later, without stopping to read it, Congress, fearing that a court-martial might be more severe in prescribing the penalty than it should be, passed a statute authorizing the President of the United States to promulgate an order specifically fixing the maximum punishment that might be imposed upon a soldier for the violation of any of his duties as a soldier, including all the cases to which I have referred and all the cases arising under what I now read as article 62. After thus carefully and in detail providing specifically for every offense they could foresee, they then enacted this omnibus clause. I will read it from the book, as in my notes I abbreviated it somewhat:

ARTICLE 62. All crimes not capital, and all disorders and neglects, which officers and soldiers may be guilty of to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, though not mentioned in the foregoing Articles of War, are to be taken cognizance of by a general or a regimental, garrison, or field officers' court-martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense and punished at the discretion of such court.

First, then, there is specific provision as to all offenses that could be foreseen, every offense, every neglect of duty, every disorder that they could enumerate, basing their enumeration upon past experience, and then, for fear they might have omitted some case and thereby have left it to a superior officer, to anyone, no matter what his rank, from the Commander in Chief down to the one immediately over him, they were careful to provide in this omnibus way as to all disorders and neglects which are prejudicial to good order and military discipline.

Now, Mr. President, that is broad enough, I think it would be agreed without any argument on my part, to cover the case in question.

But this sixty-second article of war has received judicial interpretation. Let me say in passing that this article 62 was not enacted until after the civil war was ended. It was not in force when General Grant did something that we were cited to yesterday as a precedent. I will comment upon that specifically presently. It certainly was not in force in the Confederate army when General Lee discharged some regiment for cowardice. I do not know what the constitutional power of General Lee was. I do not know what his statutory authority was, but I know enough about the character of the case from what the President has said about it in his message and in the notes upon it attached to his message to say if it had been in the United States Army it could not have been cited as a precedent for this kind of a case.

I now read from General Davis in his work on Military Law. I read from page 473, what is meant by "neglect and disorders" that are prejudicial to good order and military discipline. He says:

A "neglect" is an omission or forbearance to do a thing that can be done or that is required to be done. In its ordinary meaning it is an omission, from carelessness, to do something that can be done or ought to be done. The obligation to perform the act or thing neglected is military in character and arises in connection with the requirements of military duty. Law, regulations, orders, and, where these are silent, the custom of service prescribe the several military duties and obligations the neglect of which is chargeable under this article; the evidence submitted in a particular case shows the manner in which the duty was performed and the particulars in respect to which there has been criminal neglect. The term "disorder," as used in this connection, is more comprehensive than when used in reference to civil affairs, and includes not only disorders in the sense of frays, quarrels, and the like, but all interruptions of the good order which should prevail in camp or garrison and willful departures from that orderly recurrence of events which constitutes military discipline and which are, as such, harmful or prejudicial to good order and military discipline.

Then in a note cases are cited in support of the text. I read from one of them, from the note at the foot of page 474. It was a case where it was held that "refusing to testify when duly required to attend and give evidence as a witness before a court-martial" was a disorder and a neglect of duty prejudicial to good order and military discipline, cognizable under the sixty-second Article of War, and therefore an offense for which, by virtue of that article, the accused was entitled to trial by court-martial. That is what it was charged these soldiers were guilty of in this case——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator is speaking about the power to discharge without honor, I find that I have a memorandum here from General Ainsworth——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I am going to take that up separately.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to ask the Senator if he would explain how it was that 352 enlisted men of the Regular Army have been discharged without honor during the past two years?

Mr. FORAKER. I will explain it, and take pleasure in explaining it. I shall take pleasure in showing to the Senator that in no one of those cases was there any punishment involved, but simply a withholding of honor. I will talk about the argument presently as to whether or not there is punishment in this case. In all those cases there was no punishment involved; they simply severed connection with the Army, as in the case of a young boy who comes and wants to enlist and misrepresents his age, stating that he is of an age which authorizes him to enlist; but the next day or the next month or six months thereafter his mother comes and says: "This is my only support. He has made a misrepresentation about his age. Here is the record. He is only 16," or whatever his age may be, "and he did not have my consent to enlist. I want to have him discharged." Thereupon, the case going to the Secretary of War or to the President, he is discharged without honor, according to this regulation. But I will speak about what "without honor" implies presently.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not mean to suggest that that is the only cause of a discharge "without honor?"

Mr. FORAKER. No; certainly not. I gave that simply as one illustration. Dozens of illustrations might be given.

Mr. LODGE. Of the 352, 113 were discharged without honor on account of desertion, 8 on account of desertion and fraudulent enlistment, 107 on account of imprisonment under sentence of civil court, and 38 on account of having become disqualified from service through their own misconduct.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. That is as good a set of illustrations as I could use, and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to the fact that they are all found in this report. A man is discharged without honor because he was a deserter. What is implied in it? The man who was regularly enlisted and then deserted was liable to be tried and found guilty of desertion, but he came and said, "I deserted; there were extenuating circumstances; I hope you will not punish me; I will be glad if you will give me my discharge; I will take a discharge without honor;" and the War Department or the commander of the department or the President, whoever it may be who can do it, says, "Very well; we will get rid of you on the terms you propose; we will give you a discharge without honor." There is no punishment in that. They are simply withholding from a man not entitled to it what belongs only to the man who has honorably served, "faithfully and honestly," through his enlistment, to employ the language of the statute. There is no punishment in such case, but rather a favor.

So it is with the other cases enumerated. In each of them the discharge was granted, and if we had the complete record you would find it was granted doubtless on the application of the man discharged.

But that is a very different case, Mr. President, from this. In cases of that kind I think it is well enough to have a discharge without honor, as contradistinguished from a discharge that is honorable or a discharge that is dishonorable.

But, Mr. President, there is no statutory provision which recognizes a discharge without honor except only as the Congress of the United States has acquiesced in regulations for the government of the Army prescribed by the President of the United States, in which such discharges are mentioned for cases of this kind. Until 1895, when the regulations now in force were issued, during Mr. Cleveland's Administration, through his Secretary of War, Mr. Lamont, nobody had ever heard officially of a discharge without honor. But everybody recognized that there were cases where it was not right to give a man an honorable discharge, and yet not proper to give him a dishonorable discharge. They did not want to go to the trouble of court-martialing him in order that they might give him a dishonorable discharge. The cases were such as have been referred to. A man who enlisted through misrepresentation as to his age was not entitled to an honorable discharge, and they said, "We will let him go, out of consideration for his mother and for his tender years. We will overlook it and give him a discharge, but will say without honor," so that he can not carry away a certificate of the Government that should be given only to men who have served honestly and faithfully.

Mr. PROCTOR. It was a void enlistment.

Mr. FORAKER. It was a void enlistment, and they simply cut the matter short on the application of the soldier without going through the trouble and annoyance of a trial.

But, Mr. President, when you come to a case like this, where men are not seeking a discharge, but where they are protesting against it, where men are charged with having committed a heinous crime, as the President said yesterday, the most atrocious crime that was ever committed in connection with the Army—where we have a case of this kind, and the men are protesting their innocence, saying, "We have served long, and we have served faithfully, and we had nothing whatever to do with this wrong of which you talk, and we know nothing about it," it is not a case for a discharge without honor, and to say that it is a discharge that can be distinguished from a dishonorable discharge is simply to undertake to make a distinction where really there is none, as I shall point out.

Now, here is what Winthrop says upon that subject, in the first volume of Military Law and Precedents. I read from page 848:

Discharge "without honor."—This is a species of discharge recently introduced into our practice, as supposed to be warranted by the fourth article, and proper to be given where the circumstances which have induced the discharge are discreditable to the soldier. But the distinction between a discharge "without honor" and a "dishonorable" discharge is fanciful and unreal, and, in the opinion of the author, it is open to discussion whether this newly invented form is legally authorized under this article.

I might read further, but I have read enough to show what he has to say—and he is an acknowledged authority on the subject—of a discharge without honor. The distinction is fanciful, it is unreal; it is unreal because in a case like this it does involve punishment, no matter what may be said by the President or anybody else to the contrary.

The President said in his message of yesterday—I want to get the exact language—

People—

I am one of them—

have spoken as if this discharge from the service was a punishment. I deny emphatically that such is the case, because as punishment it is utterly inadequate.

And so on.

Mr. President, we will agree that, if these men committed this atrocious offense, the punishment of being discharged without honor is inadequate; if they deliberately committed murder, the punishment appropriate is death, as the President says; and if their comrades deliberately were guilty of misprision of felony in refusing to give testimony as to the facts of which they had knowledge, they committed a crime punishable with imprisonment in the penitentiary for three years. So the President is right in saying that the punishment he has imposed is inadequate. But, Mr. President, punishment does not have to be adequate to be punishment. It is punishment although it may be grossly inadequate if measured by the character of the offense. If these men committed murder, as charged, the punishment is inadequate. If they were innocent of murder and innocent of misprision of felony, then is the punishment of a discharge without honor grossly exaggerated, harsh, and brutal, for in that case they would not have committed any crime and yet be severely punished.

But now let us see whether this was a punishment or not. Sometimes men talk more frankly before a point has been called to their attention. I do not refer to the President in that connection, but refer to the Inspector-General, upon whom he chiefly relies, General Garlington. General Garlington has made a report which accompanies the President's message, now before us officially, in which he tells of following the investigation of the report of Major Blocksom, the assistant inspector. He went down to Fort Reno, where these men were encamped, and there investigated this subject, examining the men with a view to finding out, if possible, if he could prove that this shooting in the town of Brownsville was done by the soldiers of this regiment. What is it he says?

First, he said there was an order under which he went there to perform this duty; an order issued by the Acting Secretary of War, Robert Shaw Oliver, in which he was instructed to see these men and to inform them frankly and fully that they must disclose knowledge as to who of their comrades had committed this offense, or else they would be mustered out of the service without honor and be debarred from ever again entering the service. What does he say he did? He says he met the men; he examined them all so far as he thought it necessary, a great many of them, at least, with very great care. He says "only one man presented himself voluntarily, and that was not to give information, but to urge his own case for exemption from the penalty imposed by the President."

I want to refer to the dictionary to see just what is meant by the word "penalty" and how it is defined by lexicographers. I have always understood that "penalty" means punishment; that when some authority imposed a penalty that that authority was seeking to impose punishment. In the concluding paragraph of his report General Garlington says:

> I recommend that orders be issued as soon as practicable discharging, without honor, every man in Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, serving at Fort Brown, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, and forever debarring them from reenlisting in the Army or Navy of the United States, as well as from employment in any civil capacity under the Government.

The order of the President was written upon the back of this report and returned to the War Department: "Let this recommendation be executed." I am not trying to give the exact language, but it was an order of the President to execute that recommendation to muster the men out without honor, to debar them from entering the military service, to debar them from entering the naval service, to debar them perpetually from entering the civil service. But what does he say further:

> In making this recommendation I recognize the fact that a number of men who have no direct knowledge as to the identity of the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who actually fired the shots on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, will incur this extreme penalty.

Now, what is "penalty?" The Century Dictionary says:

> Penalty * * * (see penality, of which penalty is a doublet). 1. Suffering, in person or property, as a punishment annexed by law or judicial decision to a violation of law; penal retribution.

Now, Mr. President, what General Garlington recommended was that this extreme penalty, which meant extreme punishment, should be inflicted upon these men; and when we observe the consequence of it, extreme it was indeed, for these men went forth branded, in the first place, as murderers; branded as having been participators in the commission of one of the most atrocious crimes that ever disgraced the United States Army, as the President of the United States says; branded not only as murderers, but branded as conspirators to suppress knowledge of the murder and to prevent the bringing to trial and punishment of the guilty perpetrators of that atrocious crime. Not only that, Mr. President, but guilty also of committing perjury, for every one of them had sworn that he was asleep in the barracks; that he had no knowledge of the matter and could not give any information about it. Those men go forth, Mr. President, branded in that way. I wish I had the report that came in here showing the individual records of these men. I started to look through it yesterday, but we reached the consideration of this resolution before I had time to pursue it very far. But I saw the beginning of it, and the name that stands at the head of that list is that of Mingo Saunders, first sergeant. I observe that he had served twenty-six years, a number of years in the Philippine Islands, in Cuba, and in the Indian wars. He had been enlisted, I think, eight times, and each time honorably discharged before he was again reenlisted. He enlisted eight times, as I have said, and at the end of each enlistment was discharged, and under the head "remarks," it is said each time, "excellent soldier," or "faithful and reliable soldier," or something of equivalent import every time he was discharged; a complimentary remark of that character—"faithful," "reliable," "excellent," "extremely good," "efficient," etc., showing that, in the language of the statute, he had served "honestly and faithfully" twenty-six years.

Mr. SPOONER. What was his character?

Mr. FORAKER. His character was excellent; and yet that man, whose character is excellent, is branded as a perjurer who has been in conspiracy to suppress the crime of murder. Why, Mr. President, an atrocious crime has been committed if that man is not guilty. When the facts are all known we will know who has committed the atrocious crime. This is only one case. I do not know how many more of these soldiers there were who had long terms of service to their credit; but they have all been discharged in that same way, with remarks of "excellent service," "faithful," "reliable service," etc. Such was the record of Mingo Sanders until in November last he was given this piece of paper, discharging him without honor, to carry around with him all the rest of his life, branding him as a criminal against the country he had been so faithfully serving, and included in the denunciation that is visited upon the men of this battalion. Is there no punishment involved? Is it anything but punishment, and was not punishment the avowed purpose?

That is not all. General Garlington said again, speaking of these men:

> They appear to stand together in a determination to resist the detection of the guilty; therefore they should stand together when the penalty falls.

So it is that three or four times the Inspector-General, whose recommendation the President approved and whose recommendation was his order, has spoken of what happened as a penalty or a punishment, and there is no distinction between the terms.

I shall go back now, if I can, to where I was when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] interrupted me. While I do not object to interruptions, when I tell a Senator I am coming to a certain point directly I hope he will allow me to approach it in regular order, so that I will not be diverted.

Mr. LODGE. I will not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. FORAKER. I am glad to be interrupted; but if I answer I will hear the interruption later, because of the logical arrangement I have in my mind of the remarks I desire to address to the Senate, I hope that Senators will do me the favor not to compel me to anticipate what will properly follow later in my remarks.

I was pointing out that article 62 of the Articles of War is an omnibus clause and covers every kind of offense not specified. I was reading from the authorities by which that has been interpreted, and I had just called attention to the fact that one of the cases coming under the sixty-second article of war was a case where a soldier had refused to give testimony before a court-martial. That is very much like what happened here. On page 476 the author says:

> As to whether an act which is a civil crime is also a military offense no rule can be laid down which will cover all cases, for the reason that what may be a military offense under certain circumstances may lose that character under others. For instance, larceny by a soldier from a civilian is not always a military crime, but it may become such in consequence of the particular features, surroundings, or locality of the act. What these may be can not be anticipated with a sweeping rule comprehensive enough to provide for every possible conjunction of circumstances. Each case must be considered on its own facts. But if the act be committed on a military reservation or other ground occupied by the Army, or in its neighborhood, so as to be in the constructive presence of the Army, or if committed while on duty, particularly if the injury be to a member of the community whom it is the offender's duty to protect; or if committed in the presence of other soldiers, or while in uniform; or if the offender uses his military position or that of another for the purpose of intimidation or other unlawful influence or object—such facts would be sufficient to make it prejudicial to military discipline within the meaning of the sixty-second article of war.

And then in the notes found at the foot of the page occurs the following:

> If the offense be committed on a military reservation, or other premises occupied by the Army, or in its neighborhood, so as to be, so to speak, in the constructive presence of the Army; or if committed by an officer or soldier while on duty, particularly if the injury is done to a member of the community whom the offender is specially required to protect; or if committed in the presence of other soldiers, or while the offender is in uniform; or if the offender uses his military position or that of a military superior for the purpose of intimidation or other unlawful influence or object—the offense will, in general, properly be regarded as an act prejudicial to good order and military discipline, and cognizable by a court-martial under this article.

That is the sixty-second article of war.

So I might go on and read at very great length, for the authorities are numerous. It is not an open question; it has been passed on time and again, and always it has been held that it was the purpose of Congress to carefully provide that no man charged with an offense should be found guilty of it and be punished for it otherwise than by a court-martial and as the court might direct; or, if it were a crime cognizable by the civil authorities, as murder is, then a civil proceeding should follow.

I might go much further with that, but our time is limited this morning, and I will content myself with merely outlining what I shall undertake to elaborate when we reach the point where we can take this matter up for orderly and extended discussion. I hurry away from it for another reason: I want to call attention to some other matters. The President says:

The act was one of horrible atrocity, and, so far as I am aware, unparalleled for infamy in the annals of the United States Army.

If these men committed this crime, I agree with him it was an atrocious crime. You can hardly imagine that soldiers stationed in a town, as these men were, would organize a conspiracy to raid the town, go out at midnight when everybody was in bed and asleep, and undertake to "shoot up" the town and take the lives of the citizens of that community. I have no sympathy with that whatever, and it may be that all that was done; but what I want to call attention to, as I said a while ago, is that the President, in my opinion, has not only misconceived his constitutional power, but also has misconceived the testimony. What is it he tells us?

Major Blocksom's report is most careful, is based upon the testimony of scores of eyewitnesses—testimony which conflicted only in nonessentials and which established the essential facts beyond chance of successful contradiction.

The President could not have counted the witnesses. We have got them all here in the papers sent to us. We have a right to assume they are all here. We asked for them all, and the message informs us that the request of the Senate has been fully complied with. If so, we have every scrap of testimony to which the President referred when he said the guilt of the men belonging to this battalion who "shot up" the town has been established by "scores of eyewitnesses." Let us see about that.

I took some pains, after I read that over again at my home last evening, to look through this record and count the witnesses who appeared to testify against these soldiers to the effect that they had committed this offense.

There were two kinds of testimony taken. There was the testimony taken of the men themselves, to which I will call attention directly. That is testimony for the defense. Then testimony to convict the men as responsible for this raid, this murder, and all this bad conduct was taken by a self-constituted citizens' committee, which testimony was confined to the citizens of the town who were "eyewitnesses" of what occurred. The President says there were scores. I say he did not count the witnesses. I have counted them. There are just twenty-one of them—no more. I am going to read the names of them, so that they will be in the RECORD and so that, if I have made any mistake, it will be here where we can correct it. George W. Randall was the first one; O. J. Matlock was the second; Mr. Jose Martinez was the third; Mr. Adolph Bolack was the fourth; Mr. A. Baker was the fifth; Mr. A. C. Moore was the sixth; Mr. Epolita Martinez was the seventh; Mr. C. S. Canada was the eighth; Mr. Victoriana Fernandez was the ninth; Mr. Starck was the tenth; Mr. C. C. Madison was the eleventh; Mr. J. P. McDonald was the twelfth; Doctor Thorne was the thirteenth; Mr. Herbert Elkins was the fourteenth; Macedonio Ramirez was the fifteenth; Genaro Padron was the sixteenth; Guy Rentfro was the seventeenth; Celedonio Garza was the eighteenth; F. M. McCampbell was the nineteenth; M. G. Dalling was the twentieth, and G. W. H. Rucker was the twenty-first.

I looked through this testimony very carefully simply to confirm what I thought when I read it the first time and to see how many out of the twenty-one were, in fact, eyewitnesses. There is no pretense that there is any testimony here except what is found in the statements of these twenty-one, who, as I say, were not sworn. They appeared before the self-constituted committee that had no power to administer oaths, and nobody administered an oath. They simply stated what they knew of the trouble that occurred the night before.

Now, let me show how many of them claimed to be eyewitnesses. I am going to take the time to read this testimony to you. I will read first the testimony of Mr. Adolph Bolack. I will undertake to point out just how many of the twenty-one showed by their testimony that they were eyewitnesses or that they had any knowledge whatever of the facts. They do not know half as much as the President thinks he knows. Adolph Bolack's testimony is as follows:

Q. Now, tell what you know.—A. Well, my wife and daughter hear the shooting and come arunning out in the dining room and got frightened. I was coming out to see what was coming on, but she would not let me. I went to my window and saw Dominguez—

He was a policeman—and two policemen go by. I holler, but Dominguez did not hear me. After they got by they commenced shooting again. And that is all I know. In about three minutes the shooting commenced in the alley.

Mr. SCOTT. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. FORAKER. I am reading from Major Blocksom's report, which is embodied in the report the Senator has before him.

Mr. SCOTT. Why does not the Senator read from the other copy?

Mr. FORAKER. I use this because I did not have the other, and I have my notes on the margin. The testimony continues:

Q. Could you see anyone shooting?—A. Saw nothing.

That is far enough to read, I suppose, to count him out. That leaves the number but 20.

Mr. A. Baker was called to the stand. This is his testimony:

Q. Just tell what you know.—A. I heard shooting during the night; don't know exactly what hour.

Q. Was it a pistol or rifle?—A. It sounded like a pistol. I jumped up and my brother came out and asked what it was. We climbed up on a tank and looked over into the fort. The shooting commenced. There were four or five shots near the wall. Then they commenced shooting uptown.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Near the old ice plant, in lot 9, block 59, I think.

Q. Did you see the men cross the wall?—A. No.

Q. Do you remember hearing a bugle call?—A. Yes.

Q. Was the firing before or after the bugle call?—A. There were some shots before the bugle call; then the bugle; then more shots; then the bugle call; then more shots. I heard the men run down the stairs, like they were coming to a fire, and some one hollered "Fall in line," and then, "March," and they went uptown.

All are agreed that one of the companies, comprising fifty-odd men, was sent out to patrol the town immediately after the fight.

Q. Did you hear the roll call?—A. Yes; about half an hour after they got back—a half or three-quarters of an hour after the firing ceased and they went back to the post.

Q. From where you were, could you look down in the alley?—A. Yes.

Q. At the time of the firing, or within five minutes after the firing, did you see anyone running through the alley?—A. No.

Q. Were you expecting trouble last night?—A. Yes. Yesterday evening, about 6 o'clock, two soldiers came up to the house and asked if Mr. Baker lived there. Then they said they wanted a big, broad-shouldered fellow, who said he was from Georgia. So we got our arms and guarded our residence.

Q. Do you know of the shot that Mr. Randall spoke of having gone through his room?—A. Yes; I heard it whistle.

Q. Did you notice the flash of any guns toward the fort?—A. No.

Q. If they had had a roll call you could have heard it?—A. Yes; I heard the last one and heard nearly every name called.

Q. Why were you noticing this?—A. After they had the other trouble the officer told him to report to him and that he would have a roll call and get who was out. So I noticed for the roll call this time.

Q. Did you hear the shooting up in town?—A. Yes.

Q. How many shots did you hear?—A. One hundred and fifty, maybe two hundred. It looked like volleys of them were being fired.

(Excused.)

He saw nothing. That reduces the number to nineteen.

The next testimony is the following:

Mr. A. C. MOORE takes stand. (Proprietor of Miller Hotel.)

Q. This committee is sitting for the purpose of getting information that will place the saddle on the right horse. You are running the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes.

Q. Are there any bullet holes in the hotel?—A. Yes; about six.

Q. Shot by whom?—A. By people; last night.

Q. What time?—A. About 12.

Q. Did you see anyone shoot?—A. No.

Q. Did you hear?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell what you know.—A. The first shooting started down by the garrison. The shooting still continued, and they came up the alley right by our rooms. They gave the command here and fired. Then they came out on Elizabeth street. There they gave the same command again—"Halt; fire!"

Q. Could you tell who they were—negroes or white people?—A. Well, it was a good, strong voice and English spoken.

Q. Could you see them?—A. No; I could not leave my wife; she was in hysterics.

That is enough to read of his testimony. He goes on to make it more emphatic that he saw nothing, but heard shots fired, as everybody else did. That disposes of three of them, and only eighteen are left.

In giving the list of witnesses I counted Mr. Epolita Martinez as one of the twenty-one. Concerning him, however, there is this statement printed in the testimony:

Mr. Epolita Martinez called to the stand, but as he was called to verify a rumor concerning a soldier's remarks in his (Martinez's) drinking place, which he denied the truth of, his statements are excluded from record.

That disposes of him and leaves seventeen.

Mr. C. S. Canada then testified as follows:

Q. We are inquiring into the matter of last night with a view to ascertaining who the guilty parties are. We know they were negro soldiers—

That is the way they commenced—

If there is anything that would throw any light on the subject we would like to have it.—A. I did not see a single man, that I am sure. My room is up on the third floor. As soon as the shooting began I went down on second floor and went out on the gallery. I saw that policeman and saw that the horse was wounded. He staggered and fell. I could tell by his rather dark clothes that he was an officer.

Q. Could you see who fired the shots?—A. No; I could not give any description of the men.

So we will dismiss him. There are sixteen of them left.

I next call attention to the testimony of Mr. Starck, who is one of the men who had his house fired into.

Q. Tell what you know.—A. I don't know that I can help you much. About half past 12 last night I was awakened by a volley being fired into my home. One of the shots passed right over our beds, through both our bedroom and my children's bedroom. I saw man running down the street coming this way. He had a rifle in his hand in about this position [motions at shoulder]. I came to the window and saw an object behind the trees at Mr. Turk's and was about to come down on him when I recognized him as one of the policemen.

Q. Were you able to identify any of them as being negroes?—A. No.

Q. You only saw one man?—A. Yes; but there were more than one, for there was a volley.

Q. How many shots did you hear before and after?—A. I could not say exactly—fifty or a hundred. I heard a lot of shooting after the bugle call at the post.

Q. When were the shots?—A. Just after the bugle call. The first shooting was after the bugle call.

So he saw nothing. We now have only fifteen.

Mr. C. C. Madison took the stand. He was asked:

Q. We are here for the purpose of obtaining information touching what happened last night. Tell us everything you know about it. Who you saw shoot, if anybody.—A. We (Mr. Madison was accompanied by another tinner and could not be induced to converse in anything but the first person plural) did not see anything. The shooting took place 10 or 15 feet from where we were sleeping.

So that reduces it to fourteen.

Doctor Thorne is the next:

Tell the committee what you know.—A. I know nothing except what I heard.

So I will pass him by. That cuts it down to thirteen. I will read next the testimony of Guy Rentfro:

Was at Creager's house on Monday night last, and heard some voices; shortly after heard the words "There he goes," and after that—about fifteen or twenty minutes after—I heard some more shots. Did not hear any conversation. That was Monday night last. I know Mike Hamilton. He is a colored man. Saw him going in direction of Tillman's house, near last street of garrison wall. Have not seen him since. Three or four guards are stationed inside firing line. Was still going in direction of garrison when last saw him. That's all.

He saw nothing. That cuts the number down to twelve.

Celedonio Garza's testimony is next:

Yes, sir; I am sheriff of this county. On Monday last I came into town, and was advised that soldiers had broken out of the post. After the shooting I came out to see what was the matter.

He saw nothing. I have read enough to show that. That is the only purpose in reading it. That cuts the number down to eleven.

The next is F. M. McCampbell's testimony:

I was on my way to the house on the night of the 13th, when we met some soldiers, and they turned the guns on us and asked us, "What are you sons of bitches hunting for?" I think it was a whole company. I did not see any white officer with them. I just saw the ranks of the soldiers. They went in the direction of town, and "we care very little if we shoot you full of holes," they said. Mr. Fielder was going to the hotel. I did not see any firing. I don't think there was a commissioned officer with the soldiers. That's all, about, I know. This happened right about behind the market. There must have been about fifty or sixty men in the company. Mr. Fielder was with me going to the Rio Grande Hotel at that time. That's all.

He testifies he saw no firing and that the troops he saw were fifty or sixty in number, which was undoubtedly the company with which Captain Lyon, under the order of Major Penrose, patrolled the town. That cuts the number down to ten.

Next is the testimony of M. G. Dalling:

I am a State ranger. I have come into the possession of some information this morning, which I got from this soda-water man, who sells soda water. He told me that this soda-water man had been told by a saloon man who keeps a saloon in the edge of the town that some shooting had been done last night, and that Company C could have taken the whole town if they had wanted to, and that they could take the whole damn State.

That cuts it down to nine. Then there is the testimony of G. W. H. Rucker:

About Monday night last, about half-past 8, I took two cases of soda water to saloon near edge of town. There were about thirty or forty negroes inside, gambling, as near as I can ascertain about the crowd, and I heard three or four negroes making threats that they would die and go to heaven before they would go back into post, but do not know what the conversation was about. Yes; I know if I would see this soldier again I would recognize him. I could pick him out of a crowd. He was a soldier. Yesterday morning I passed this negro saloon, but nobody was there. About 12 o'clock, it must have been, as I was picking up empty cases, I went to this saloon, and the proprietor told me that he did not need any "pop," as the boys had been having a little trouble with the citizens, and they were all in the post. He is working for two soldiers who are in the post, who own the saloon. He said that if a gun had been fired last night that Company C could have come out without any orders, and would run every man out of town; that this Company C could whip the whole State of Texas.

So he saw nothing.

That cuts the number down to eight. In other words, instead of "scores of eyewitnesses" who have testified to this transaction, there are only eight men at most; for nobody will pretend that there are any other witnesses than those to whom I now call attention; nobody will pretend that there is any other witness, sworn or unsworn, who pretended as an eyewitness to detail what occurred. "Scores" would mean at least forty. Therefore I say the President has been imposed upon. He has seen fit to point out with a great deal of particularity, as it seemed to me under the circumstances, that Major Blocksom, who reported this testimony to him, is from Ohio, and he points out that Major Blocksom has made a most careful report, and that Major Blocksom has reported the testimony of these scores of eyewitnesses.

Mr. President, I have not in this case commented on individuals. I have not said anything about General Garlington being a southern man, born in the South, born in South Carolina, I believe, and appointed from Georgia. I have assumed that he is a good officer and an honorable man. I have said nothing about Major Blocksom, but it seems to me he is intruded into this case by the President in a very prominent way as from Ohio, and that his report should be strengthened thereby; and we are told that it was Major Blocksom who got the testimony that fixed the guilt by scores of eyewitnesses. I will presently speak of the testimony of the eight eyewitnesses, but before I do that I wish to mention something else.

When a matter of this kind comes up, you do not generally have to ask for information. It is astonishing how kind people are. They send you information. My mail has borne to me a great deal. Among others that have come to me is the following. It comes from a most reputable, a most honored man in the State of Ohio, a man of the highest character, who has known Major Blocksom all his life. I am going to read you what he says about him. Major Blocksom, I take great pleasure in saying, because he is from my State, is a good officer, but I want to say preliminarily to reading this that if there is a man from Ohio in the Army who, unfortunately, beyond any other, was unfitted for this special work, it was Major Blocksom. He is not aware of it, I imagine. Unconsciously he is the victim of early influences. Men are sometimes insensibly influenced. I think he was in this case. Here is what was written to me:

Major Blocksom was born and reared in Zanesville, Ohio. His father, Augustus P. Blocksom, was a prominent attorney there. I knew him well. He was an active and radical Democratic politician, and was entirely consistent in his views, with all the old war Democratic ideas, and never lost an opportunity to express these views in public. He was somewhat of an orator and could always find an interested audience among his Democratic hearers of the Vallandigham type. This is the kind of milk his son was fed upon.

I do not know how many of my colleagues here know just what a Vallandigham copperhead Democrat of Ohio was, but if there was a man in all this broad land who had an antipathy beyond another to a negro in that civil-war time it was that kind of a man. Everybody knows that. Sometime I may, or if I had more time I might now, say more on that subject. But it is not necessary. But this officer was the son of that kind of a father, and had in his youth that kind of political affiliation and that kind of political atmosphere. It is natural that he should inherit that prejudice and carry it with him and be insensibly influenced by it in the discharge of this very delicate duty. I think anybody could see, by simply reading his report, there was some kind of a screw loose with him.

Let me call attention to his report. I did not bring him into this case. The President has called attention to the fact that this officer comes from Ohio, and so he does; he was appointed to the academy on the recommendation of a very able and accomplished Democratic Congressman who represented that district at the time—back in 1872. Here is Major Blocksom's report:

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 29, 1906.

Here is the first line, the first jump out of the box:

I have the honor to report investigation of trouble caused by soldiers of Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Then he proceeded. Before he gets through he has occasion to speak of a number of people. One man who seems to have won his admiration and excited it unduly was a Captain McDonald, who is described as a captain of Texas Rangers, whatever they may be, and he pays him this high compliment. Now, Mr. President, think of this going into an official report:

I believe he—

Judge Welch—

threatened McDonald with arrest for contempt before the latter gave them up—

That is, the prisoners who were in his charge—

It is possible McDonald might have fought the entire battalion with his four or five rangers were their obedience as blind as his obstinacy. It is said here he is so brave he would not hesitate to "charge hell with one bucket of water."

[Laughter.]

Then immediately he says:

I met many sterling people in Brownsville.

Captain McDonald is, I suppose, a sterling man.

Mr. SPOONER. What?

Mr. FORAKER. S-t-e-r-l-i-n-g. Captain McDonald is one of them. Like Ben Adhem, his "name led all the rest."

He then concludes, this man from Ohio:

It must be confessed the colored soldier is much more aggressive in his attitude on the social equality question than he used to be.

What has that got to do with the shooting at Brownsville? Nothing, and I pass it over. I mention it only to show his animus. I speak of it because when the President intrudes the character of Major Blocksom into this discussion I feel like it is due to the Senate to know who it is from Ohio who made this report, who went down to Brownsville and examined these witnesses, gathered up these unsworn, loose, conflicting, disjointed, and contradictory statements, which we are told amount to conclusive evidence of the guilt of these men of the most heinous crime ever committed by soldiers of the United States Army.

I might point out other things, but I have pointed out enough to show that Major Blocksom has not forgotten his early political affiliations, has not gotten entirely away from the influence of the political atmosphere he breathed in the days of his youth at Zanesville, Ohio. Well, that is enough for him.

So far as General Garlington is concerned I have not, just now, a word to say about him as a man. I do not know him. I have no disposition to criticise him or anybody else, but I do fell that it is my duty to present these facts to the Senate. We are not a lot of young men on a frolic. This is serious business. I am not talking here because of the hardship which has been caused a few men, but because it embraces a great broad principle of constitutional law and constitutional liberty. It is a precedent, if it should be established, that will apply to white men as well as to black men, that will apply to the whole country.

I intended to go into detail over the testimony of the eight witnesses, but in view of the lateness of the hour and of the engagements which I am told are pressing some of the Senators, I will pass it over with the single remark that the testimony of these eight witnesses, to any man who knows how to examine testimony and weigh it and analyze it and determine the effectiveness of it and attach to it proper weight, will be utterly unsatisfactory and insufficient to find these men guilty of the great crime with which they stand charged. And it is because these men have been convicted of this gross crime on such unsatisfactory testimony that I want the Committee on Military Affairs to be empowered to send for these people—these eight, if you please, or any others anybody can produce—and have them where they can be examined, where they can be sworn, where they will know that they are testifying under the responsibility of their oaths, and where questions can be asked. Now, Mr. President, so much for that.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. I am not through, however.

Mr. KNOX. I merely want to ask one question for my own information.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he plants himself upon the proposition that there is no evidence whatever, or that there was none before the President at the time this order was made, except such as was elicited by Major Blocksom and attached to his report?

Mr. FORAKER. I plant myself upon the proposition stated by the President, that the testimony submitted by Major Blocksom was the testimony of scores of eyewitnesses, by whose statements it was conclusively established that these men were guilty of this crime. I say, on the contrary, with all due respect to everybody, that the testimony of these eight witnesses is not sufficient of itself. The President may have had other information given to him by these inspectors. That is another matter. I will come to that later.

Mr. KNOX. All I want to know, if the Senator will permit me to supplement my question, is whether there is any necessity for searching elsewhere for the eyewitnesses to this affray than in the testimony elicited by Major Blocksom and attached to his report.

Mr. FORAKER. I will answer that when we get authority to examine witnesses. I think I can produce some testimony which will throw some important light on this transaction. I do not hesitate to say that I promise the Senate to give them some additional testimony. I think I know what I am talking about and that I am not a boy going to a frolic. This is not a case to be disposed of upon broad, unqualified, and extravagant statements. It is a question, on the one hand, of power and, on the other, a question of facts to be established by testimony taken in a proper way. But I am not yet through.

Now, the testimony, in so far as any testimony of witnesses may be concerned, is that to which I have called attention—that of eight witnesses. You will find, when you read their testimony——

Mr. KNOX. I want to know if that is the testimony upon which the order is based?

Mr. FORAKER. I say it is the testimony to which the President has called our attention. Let me read the language of the President. He does not tell us of any other testimony. He makes an argument that it could not have been done by citizens, because they fired into the houses; that it could not have been done by citizens, because there were found empty cartridge shells and clips. Is it not important, in view of the testimony which is to be found in this record, that we should know the truth about that? What other witnesses there may have been I do not know, but the President says—and in view of the question propounded to me by the Senator from Pennsylvania I will call attention again to what I have been commenting upon. The President says:

Major Blocksom's report is most careful, is based upon the testimony of scores of eyewitnesses.

Did Major Blocksom take any testimony that the President withheld from Congress? If so, will the Senator from Pennsylvania name it? I called for it all.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator from Ohio totally misapprehends the purpose of my question. I am not undertaking to antagonize anything he has stated, nor am I foreshadowing any view I may entertain about this testimony. All I want to know is whether I understand the Senator correctly when he says that this case is to be judged solely, so far as it is now before the Senate, upon the testimony of the twenty-one witnesses referred to, of whom eight alone, he says, had any observation of the transaction which occurred.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not mean to impute to the Senator antagonism to me. I did not know whether he was opposed or otherwise——

Mr. KNOX. I am trying to get information.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator wanted full information, and that is what I am trying to get and that is what I have been insisting upon. What I have been discussing and what I have been insisting upon is that the President's statement that this was a carefully prepared report of Major Blocksom, based upon the testimony of scores of eyewitnesses, was not borne out by the record that the President has sent us. If he has any other testimony, it has not come to us. We called for all of it. I assume it is all. If so, there are eight witnesses instead of scores who can be said to have tried to testify that they saw something.

Mr. President, opposed to that is the testimony of whom? The testimony of the noncommissioned officers—those who were on guard and those who were in charge of quarters and as such in charge of the gun racks—and the testimony of the commissioned officers; and without stopping to read it, for it is voluminous, I will ask the Senate to give me the privilege to incorporate in the RECORD some eight or ten affidavits. It is all in affidavit form. If there is no objection, I should like to do that. If there is objection, I will read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, permission is granted.

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Sergt. George Jackson, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

"I was in charge of the company quarters of Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, on the 13th and 14th of August, 1906.

"The company was on a practice march on the morning of the 13th and returned to the post between 10 and 11 o'clock, when the rifles of the company were returned to the racks to allow six men of the company to get their rifles to go on guard. I then locked the racks again, and there were in the racks forty-six rifles, which, with the six in the hands of the men on guard, made fifty-two rifles, for which I was accountable. The racks were not again opened until call to arms sounded, soon after midnight on the morning of the 14th, when I opened them myself.

"I was not away from the quarters at any time during the time the racks were closed, about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 13th, until they were opened when call to arms sounded on the morning of the 14th, nor were the keys to the racks ever out of my possession.

"I made check roll call of the company at 11 p. m., on the night of the 13th, and all men were present.

"I was in charge of the company quarters of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, on the 13th and 14th of August, 1906. I locked the arm racks in the company quarters between 10 and 11 o'clock a. m. August 13. There were 53 in the racks, which, with the 4 rifles in the hands of the members of the guard, made up to the total number issued to the men of Company C; that is, 57 rifles in all. The keys of the arm racks were constantly in my possession. The arm racks were not opened until about 12.15 a. m., August 14, 1906, for any reason except that about 2.30 o'clock p. m. August 13, 1906, one rack was opened for a moment to allow the supernumerary of the guard to get his rifle in order to take the place of a member of the guard who was taken sick, and whose rifle was at the same time placed in this arm rack.

"About 12.15 a. m., August 14, 1906, I was awakened by a corporal of the company, who told me that shooting had been going on and that call to arms had been sounded, and to get up and open the arm racks. I went down to the first sergeant and asked him what I should do, whether I should open the arm racks, and he said, 'Wait for orders.' Corporal Madison, whom I met as I was returning to the squad room, told me orders of the commanding officer were to open the arm racks. I then opened three racks, the fourth having been broken open by the men trying to get their rifles from the racks to fall in when call to arms sounded.

There were in the racks then fifty-two rifles and five in the hands of the men of the company on guard, making a total of fifty-seven rifles in all for which I was accountable.

I was posted as a sentinel on post No. 2, which extends around the barracks, keeping the buildings on my left, at 10.30 p. m., August 13. At about 12.10 on the morning of the 14th, when between C and B Company barracks, I heard a single shot, then five or six, and then a regular fusilade. The shots seemed to come from the street in the rear of the brick wall back of B Company's barracks. I thought they were shooting at me, and I looked in the direction of the sounds to me if I could see anybody, but I could not, and I then went to the front of the barracks and gave the alarm, by firing my piece three times and calling for the guard. I did not see anybody at all but the post scavenger, who was at the sinks in the rear of B Company's barracks. As soon as the shooting commenced he drove away with his cart.

FORT BROWN, State of Texas:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, one Matias G. Tamayo, scavenger at Fort Brown, Tex., who being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

"That at about 12.10 a. m. on the morning of August 14, 1906, he was in rear of the quarters occupied by Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry; that about this time a shot was fired by some person unknown in the street just outside the wall dividing the military reservation from the town of Brownsville, Tex.; that he could hear the bullet and that it appeared to be going in the direction of the Rio Grande River, about parallel to the above-mentioned wall; that immediately following this one shot, a number of other shots were fired, all outside the wall.

"Deponent further says that previous to the shooting he saw no soldiers anywhere in rear of the quarters occupied by the companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and heard no talking or news of any kind; and that he saw and heard no shot or shots from any of the company barracks.

"MATIAS G. TAMAYO,
"Scavenger, Fort Brown, Tex."

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 14th day of August, 1906.

SAMUEL P. LYON,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Summary Court.

F".

FORT BROWN, TEX., August 23, 1906.

Sergt. J. R. Reid, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, stated to me that he did not have the call to arms sounded (he was sergeant of the guard on the night of the 13th of August) until the shots came so fast that he thought post was attacked. He stated also that he formed the guard before having the call sounded.

A. P. BLOCKSOM,
Major, Inspector-General.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, opposed to the testimony of these eight is this testimony, taken in the form of affidavits, but taken before the summary court, Captain Lyon, who, I am told, is one of the best officers in the United States Army, a man of the highest character, a man who would not send to the President of the United States an affidavit that was given by one whom he thought was an untruthful man. The very fact that the testimony was taken before Captain Lyon is a guaranty that it was properly taken, that these men told the truth as they understood it.

According to this testimony the firing commenced about midnight. The sentry says it commenced outside the walls of the garrison. He immediately ran to a point near the barracks, and, to give the alarm, fired his own piece three times in the air. One of these eight witnesses testifies that he ran and looked out of his window and saw somebody inside the wall shooting up into the air. He saw the sentry, no doubt. He then ran back into his house, put out the light, and pulled down the blinds, so he would not get hurt. That is one of the eight on whose testimony these men are convicted of these heinous crimes.

They all testify that immediately after there turned out to be a continuance of the firing, the sergeant of the guard ordered the guard to fall in, and sent messages to the commanding officer to awaken him; and when the firing continued he ordered a call to arms to be sounded upon the bugle, and it was sounded, and immediately the whole post was aroused. Men jumped up out of their bunks and came down at midnight into the barracks room, dressing as rapidly as they could, some of them half dressed when they took their places in line; rushed to the gun racks, as told to do, to get their pieces, and every gun rack was found to be locked just as it had been locked the day before, except only one; and, in fact, that was found locked, too. But there has been a good deal made of the fact that it was broken open. A lieutenant, acting under the direct order of Major Penrose, to avoid the delay of waiting for the sergeant to get there with his key, ordered the gun rack to be broken open and the arms taken out, and that was done.

The men immediately fell into line, and before the firing ceased they formed their lines and the sergeants commenced the call of the roll, and when the call of the roll was commenced every commissioned officer was there, except only the officer of the day, who had been on duty and had gone to sleep and was sleeping so soundly that he could not be disturbed by a little thing like a raid. When the roll was called every man answered to his name and every gun was found in the gun racks. Every gun was handed out to the man to whom it belonged and every man was there. Oh, but we are told that while that is true—that while it turned out that when the roll was called they were all there, that all did answer and had their guns, yet the men who had jumped over the wall, fifteen or twenty of them, and gone down town, two or three blocks away, doing the firing, when it stopped rushed back to quarters, rejoined their commands, took their places in the ranks, answered to their names, and exhibited their guns and showed that every man was there.

Consider this a moment. Not only the noncommissioned officers, whose duty it was to place the men in proper ranks, but the commissioned officers were present at the roll call; and at that time every commissioned officer of the command was alert. They all testify they thought the garrison was being attacked and they were looking for trouble to come over the wall toward them. Does any man believe that fifteen or twenty men, who had been off engaged in an excitement of that character, shooting up the town, trying to murder people, rushing back under such circumstances, could get into camp, could join their commands, in the very presence of the noncommissioned officers and the commissioned officers also, and avoid being detected in doing so?

I think I read in the message of the President of yesterday about something being absurd. It does not make a thing absurd to say it is, but it does seem to me that I may be pardoned if I say that this statement is utterly absurd. No such thing could happen. If so, every commissioned officer of that company ought to be dismissed from service just as soon as he can be court-martialed. I would not dismiss him without a court-martial.

So it is, I say, to make a long story short and hurry away from this, there is not, as the President understands—and he does so understand it or he would not say it—any conclusive testimony to show that the men of this regiment committed this offense.

But the President said not only is the testimony conclusive so that no doubt can exist as to the guilt of certain of the men, whoever they may be, as to the raid, but that the testimony is equally conclusive to show that there is a conspiracy of silence entered into by all these men. Now, let me call the attention of Senators to the facts.

I have already commented on the facts, as the President has, that he bases what he says, as he must of necessity, upon what is reported to him by the inspectors whom he sent there and in whom he has entire confidence. He says Major Blocksom went down to elicit the proof of the guilt, and secured that and came away. Then he determined that he would muster these men out if they did not tell on one another, for he was satisfied, not from evidence but from deduction, that they were guilty. So then he sent General Garlington, the Inspector of the Army, down to Fort Reno with instructions to advise the men that unless they came forward and testified to the facts within their knowledge, whereby their comrades could be convicted, they would all be mustered out without honor.

Now, General Garlington made a report upon that. It was his purpose to find out whether or not there was this conspiracy. The President says there was, and the President says therefore he can not go amiss in dismissing these men from the Army; that is the only way that the good name of the Army can be protected; the only way that discipline can be maintained.

Now, hear what General Garlington says on the subject of a silent conspiracy:

> The uniform denial on the part of the enlisted men concerning the "barrack talk" in regard to these acts of hostility upon the part of certain citizens of Brownsville indicated a possible general understanding among the enlisted men of this battalion as to the position they would take in the premises, but I could find no evidence of such understanding.

He could not find any evidence. There is the officer of the Army, the Inspector-General, sent there for the express purpose of finding out whether or not testimony could be obtained to convict the men of that battalion, if there were any, who committed this crime, and he reports to the President that he made a labored and long-continued effort, advising the men of the penalty, the "extreme penalty," to use his own language, that would be imposed upon them if they failed to give him full information, and they gave him no information. They persisted, one and all, in saying: "I know nothing about it." In heaven's name, if a man is absolutely innocent, as these men claim to be, what else could he say? How otherwise could he prove his innocence? And that is now the new requirement.

So General Garlington, instead of reporting to the President that there is testimony which conclusively shows a conspiracy of silence to suppress testimony, reported to the President the very opposite, that there is no testimony whatever. That is what General Garlington says, and yet the President tells us in his message it is conclusively established not only that these men shot up the town, killing one man and wounding another, but also conclusively established that they have agreed that they have become conspirators to commit another crime, misprision of felony, punishable with three years in the penitentiary.

Then, on the top of that, every last one of them has gone before a duly constituted officer, the summary court, or a notary, and made affidavit that he has had no knowledge, and that affidavit we must believe is false, is perjury. Perjury, misprision of felony, and murder are all branded upon the foreheads of these men as they are turned loose upon the world in their old days, after twenty-odd years for many of them, after twenty-six years for one of them, to go up and down through this land they have done so much to serve, so much to protect, as disgraced and degraded men where they were before honored. And this not punishment!

Now, Mr. President, I want to say in conclusion what must be manifest to every member of the Senate, that it has been at a very great disadvantage I have undertaken to speak here this morning without having had an opportunity to examine these exhibits, except in the partial way I have, that the President attached to his message.

But, Mr. President, I was impelled to do it because I think the President has been imposed on as to the facts, and I believe he is big enough man, just enough man, when he knows the facts, to undo, so far as he can, the wrong which, in my judgment, has been committed, and, in so far as he may not have the power, to call upon us to exercise our power to help him undo what I think is an injustice that no language can adequately describe.

Now, the President said some other things, one about Ohio, in which he cited some precedents. Will some Senator who has the document before him show me the precedents that the Judge-Advocate-General cites?

Mr. LODGE. I have it here.

Mr. FORAKER. The President says, in so many words, that for his action there are "plenty of precedents." I want the Judge-Advocate-General's report.

Mr. LODGE. The precedents are on pages 311 and 312. General Ainsworth, The Military Secretary, furnished them.

Mr. FORAKER. I will come to that in a minute. The President says there are plenty of precedents. Well, Mr. President, I do not know where he gets that information. He does not send anything from the Judge-Advocate-General to show that he had the support of that law officer of the Army in his contention that his constitutional power is sufficient to authorize him to make this dismissal, nor does he send anything from the Judge-Advocate-General that warrants the statement that there are plenty of precedents for what he has done. What is it that The Military Secretary says?

I read as follows:

> The Secretary to the President, in a letter dated December 1, 1906, advises the Secretary of War that the President would like to have him "look up any precedents (Lee's or others) for the action taken in discharging the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and if there exist any such, send them to the President."

The Military Secretary, proceeding, says:

> A protracted examination of the official records has thus far resulted in failure to discover a precedent in the Regular Army for the discharge of those members of three companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry who were present on the night of August 13, 1906, when an affray in the city of Brownsville took place.
>
> The case referred to as "Lee's" by the Secretary to the President is undoubtedly the case of Company G, Eighth Infantry, concerning which an interview with Mr. J. C. Hesse was recently published in the Washington Post. In that interview it was stated that, by order of Lieut. Col. Robert E. Lee, the members of Company G were transferred to other companies of the same regiment and prohibited from reenlisting on the expiration of the terms of enlistment under which they were then serving. A search for papers containing details of the occurrence has resulted in failure to find them, the original papers having been returned in 1860 to the Department of Texas, where they were undoubtedly lost or destroyed at the time of the surrender of the troops in that department to the Confederate military authorities.
> The records show, however, that on March 18, 1860, members of Company G, Eighth Infantry, at Fort Davis, Tex., took from the guardhouse a citizen who was confined there and, without opposition from the guard, hanged him to a tree near by until he was dead. The records also show that by order of the regimental commander 27 men of this company were detached from the company and attached to other companies of the regiment, "to restore their discipline," and that 12 other men of the company were transferred to other companies by order of the regimental commander without the cause of transfer being stated. The regimental orders are not on file, and it is impossible to state whether the reenlistment of these transferred men was or was not prohibited; but as the records show that some of the transferred men did reenlist, it is evident that if an order prohibiting their reenlistment was given it was not carried into effect.
> In view of the foregoing statement it will be seen that the action taken in 1860 in the case of Company G, Eighth Infantry, is not a precedent for the action taken in 1906 in the case of members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.
> In the volunteer service during the civil war there occurred numerous instances of the summary discharge of large numbers of men because of misconduct on their part. Following are some of those instances:

Then he goes on with a list which I will not weary the Senate to read, but I will incorporate it all in the RECORD, and I pass it by with the single comment that Senators will study in vain to find any precedent connected with the United States Army. The nearest approach to it is a precedent given by General Lee in discharging a regiment of Confederate soldiers. What his power may have been, as I have said, I do not undertake to say. It is not necessary to discuss that. But there is no precedent in either the Volunteer or the Regular service for what the President has done here, certainly none so far as we have been advised, and therefore I say again somebody imposed on him when the President was led to say that there are plenty of precedents for what he has done here. I say there are no precedents.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> The members of Company A, First Eastern Shore Maryland Infantry Volunteers, were mustered out of service August 16, 1862, by order of the general commanding the Eighth Army Corps because they refused to serve in Virginia.

The members of Company K, First Eastern Shore Maryland Infantry Volunteers, were dishonorably discharged, without trial, July 2, 1863, pursuant to the order of the general commanding the Eighth Army Corps, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, for refusing to leave the section of the State in which it was claimed that they had enlisted to serve. The action was approved by the Secretary of War July 23, 1863.

The First Regiment, United States Reserve Corps (Missouri Infantry), was mustered out of service during September and October, 1862, pursuant to orders of the War Department, on account of the regiment being in a state bordering closely on mutiny as a result of alleged misunderstanding as to the terms of enlistment.

Companies H, I, and K, Fifth Missouri Cavalry, and Company G, Fourth Missouri Cavalry, were mustered out of the service of the United States without trial by court-martial, in pursuance of orders from headquarters District of Missouri, dated September 20, 1862, by reason of mutinous conduct and disaffection of the majority of the members of those companies.

Company C, Fremont Body Guard, was summarily discharged by order of Major-General Halleck, November 30, 1861, on account of the members refusing to be consolidated with any other organization of Missouri volunteers.

The members of Company G, Tenth New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, were discharged without trial, April 8, 1862, pursuant to orders from the War Department, because they refused to do duty as infantry, claiming that they were deceived into the belief that they were entering the cavalry branch when they enlisted.

The Eleventh Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers (First Fire Zouaves), was mustered out of service June 2, 1862, pursuant to orders from the War Department, by reason of general demoralization, numerous desertions, and at the request of officers and enlisted men of the organization.

The Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers was summarily discharged November 10, 1862, pursuant to a telegram from the War Department, because the regiment was "disorganized, mutinous, and worthless."

Mr. FORAKER. But whatever precedents there may have been in the case of General Grant or of General Lee or of any other general in the field commanding during a time of war would not apply in time of peace. What may have been done during the civil war would not apply, not only because it was done during a time of war, but because it was done before the Articles of War, in the form in which I have read them and commented on them, were placed in the statutes of the United States. Since these Articles of War were framed and enacted, as they are to-day, no man can be convicted of an offense without first having a chance before a court-martial to make his defense, to face his accusers, and cross-examine the witnesses, who seek to disgrace him before the world.

But now one of these precedents cited is the Sixtieth Ohio. Here comes Ohio again:

The Sixtieth Regiment, Ohio Infantry Volunteers, were summarily discharged November 10, 1862, pursuant to a telegram from the War Department, because the regiment was "disorganized, mutinous, and worthless."

Mr. President, it was with very great surprise and with very great pain I read that statement in the President's message of yesterday. I know something about the Sixtieth Ohio. I tried to enlist in it, but I was too young. I was only 15 years old, and they would not let me go. That was the first year of the war. The second year, when they were not so particular and when I was 16, I managed to get in; and I was not as much pleased with it after I got in as I thought I would be, but I stayed there until the end.

The Sixtieth Ohio was a one year's regiment. It was raised chiefly in Highland and adjoining counties. The colonel of it was William H. Trimble, of Hillsboro, a man whom I knew as intimately as a boy could know a man of full age and full of the affairs of the world. A more courtly gentleman, a more patriotic man, a more lovable man never volunteered as a soldier to defend the flag of this country.

He was related to Senator Trimble, who represented the State in this body after he had been a soldier and had been wounded at Fort Meigs, fighting the Indians in the war of 1812. He came here and died here, and his body rests now in the Congressional Cemetery. No name in our State is more honored than that of Trimble. It is the first time in the history of our State that anybody by the name of Trimble has ever been criticised for failure to adequately and fittingly and faithfully and heroically discharge any duty he assumed.

I lived in Highland County at that time. It must be that the records show this discharge, but if the records do show it I can only plead that I never heard of it before.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Ohio suspend a moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary?

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORAKER. I am much obliged to the Senator from Wisconsin for his courtesy in allowing me to proceed at this time.

I send to the desk and ask that the Secretary may read from "Ohio in the War," by Whitelaw Reid, what he says about the Sixtieth Ohio, the one year's regiment referred to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary read as follows:

SIXTIETH OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY—ONE-YEAR REGIMENT.

There were two regiments of this number—the first raised for a term of one year and the second for three years. The one now under consideration is that raised for the one-year term. It was recruited in Highland, Fayette, Ross, Clark, Brown, Clermont, Adams, Gallia, and Noble counties by Col. William Trimble, and was intended specially for the defense of the border counties of Ohio.

The regiment being ready for the field was ordered, on the 8th of February, 1862, to Gallipolis to guard military stores, and during the three months it was on duty at this point paid such special attention to drill and discipline as to eminently fit it for field service. On the 25th of February, 1862, the regiment was fully mustered into the United States service and sent to the field on the 27th of April, 1862. It joined General Fremont's forces at New Creek, in western Virginia, about that time.

The Sixtieth was placed in a brigade with the Eighth Virginia Infantry, and with Fremont's forces marched to McDowell to the relief of Schenck's and Milroy's troops, then threatened by the enemy at that point. The march was a forced one, and from the discretion of the commanding officer of the brigade, Colonel Cluseret, a French officer, many men of the Sixtieth and other regiments were totally disabled from further service for months. The enemy was met, after many skirmishes, near Strasburg, and a brisk engagement ensued. In this affair the Sixtieth Ohio behaved like veterans and won reputation.

The march up the Shenandoah Valley, in pursuit of Jackson, was one of the most terrible ever endured by men; yet the brave soldiers of the Sixtieth and other regiments bore it without a murmur. At Port Republic the enemy was again overtaken and engaged. The Sixtieth Ohio once more displayed its good discipline and fine fighting qualities. Ashby's rebel cavalry figured in this battle and was almost directly opposed by the Sixtieth Ohio. Ashby was killed, confusion ensued in the rebel ranks, and in a few minutes all signs of the enemy disappeared.

The pursuit was continued, with more or less skirmishing, and occasionally a determined stand by the enemy. At Cross Keys the rebel general, Stonewall Jackson, made overtures for battle. He was at once resolutely met by General Fremont's army, and after a fierce engagement lasting some hours both parties withdrew. The battle commenced at an early hour in the morning and lasted until 4 o'clock p. m. It was a well-contested affair, in which both the national and rebel troops displayed the most determined bravery. The Sixtieth Ohio was highly complimented on the field for its firmness and coolness under fire. Its loss in men killed and wounded was severe.

Early on the morning of the 9th of June the Sixtieth and Eighth Virginia, forming an extended skirmish line, swept over the battlefield of the previous day, but without encountering the enemy. He had fled during the night and escaped across the Shenandoah River near Port Republic, burning the bridge after him. Shields's forces had failed to intercept him. Colonel Carroll's brigade, of Shields's division, did get into position on the opposite side of the river, but after making a gallant fight was overpowered and driven off.

The national forces did not pursue Jackson's rebel army. The morning of the 12th of June found Fremont's army at Mount Jackson, it having fallen back to that position to prevent the rebel army from getting into its rear and endangering its communications. Here, for the first time during the campaign, the officers and men of the Sixtieth slept in tents. At this point the Sixtieth Ohio and Eighth Virginia parted, the Thirty-second Ohio taking the place of the Eighth Virginia. Both of the last-named regiments were assigned to General Piatt's brigade and made part of General Schenck's division.

The national army moved from Mount Jackson on the 19th of June and reached Strasburg on the 22d. The illness of General Piatt placed Colonel Trimble, of the Sixtieth, in command of the brigade. Leaving General Milroy's brigade at Strasburg, General Fremont moved to Middletown on the 24th, at which point the army, with the exception of Piatt's brigade, remained until July 8. At this point General Fremont and staff left the army, leaving it in command of General Schenck until General Sigel, the successor of Fremont, should report.

The national forces moved from Middletown on the 8th of July, by Front Royal, to join General Pope, leaving a large amount of military stores in and around Middletown guarded by a force of infantry, cavalry, and artillery. While lying at this place news was received that the rebel General Jackson had again penetrated into the Shenandoah Valley with 5,000 cavalry and was menacing Winchester. Colonel Trimble, of the Sixtieth, was ordered to take a force from his regiment and assume command on reaching other national forces near Strasburg, the point where Jackson was maneuvering. Two hundred and fifty volunteers were selected from the Sixtieth, many of the line officers serving as privates. Thirty mule teams were taken with the expedition for the purpose of expediting the movement and transporting supplies. Middletown was reached before daylight. The enemy still threatening this point, all the Government stores were removed from Front Royal and the national forces marched into Winchester.

Winchester was held until the night of the 2d of September, when it was evacuated by order of the War Department, the defeat of the Army of the Potomac, under General Pope, rendering the move necessary. The Sixtieth Ohio led the column on the night march from Winchester, reaching Harpers Ferry on the 3d of September. General White was ordered by Major-General Wool to Martinsburg, and his Winchester command was added to that of Colonel Miles at Harpers Ferry. Then came the disaster to the national forces at Harpers Ferry. It would be useless to go into a detailed statement of that affair. The Sixtieth Ohio, under command of Colonel Trimble, resisted successfully the attack of Gen. A. P. Hill's rebel division on the left flank in an infantry and artillery engagement lasting from 3 o'clock p. m. on Sunday, September 14, until after dark. It endured, with the balance of Colonel Trimble's command, on the morning of the 15th, till near 9 o'clock, the concentrated fire of over fifty guns, which enfiladed the position, making a dangerous cross-fire over every portion of the command. The anxiety of the rebels to silence Rigby's battery, supported on the right by the Sixtieth, caused a continuous front, flank, and rear fire upon this point. The Sixtieth Ohio remained firm under this severe fire, protected only by a slight breastwork thrown up hastily on Sunday morning. The enemy, though constantly feeling for the regiment, failed to get its range until near the time of surrender. If the men had risen to their feet they would have been swept from the ground. The adjutant of the regiment lost his hand by a solid shot early in the engagement. Twelve privates were killed and wounded. None felt more keenly the mortification of surrender than the men of the Sixtieth Ohio.

After the surrender it marched in the same brigade organization to Annapolis. General Tyler, being placed in command of the paroled troops, reorganized them, with several regiments, including the Sixtieth and some artillery companies, under Colonel Trimble. The colonel was, shortly after this, badly crippled by being thrown from his horse and did not join the regiment before its honorable discharge by the Secretary of War, October 10, 1862, at Camp Douglas, Chicago.

Almost immediately after the discharge of the regiment the great majority of its members reenlisted into other organizations for three years and served gallantly until the close of the war, many of them laying down their lives in the cause of their country.

The failure by General White to provide in the capitulation for the free colored servants in the command came near proving disastrous to them. Colonel Trimble's anxiety upon this subject, and a sense of duty to those whose freedom was imperiled by the surrender, caused him to bring the subject to the attention of General Jackson on his entering the lines with his staff. He was told no provision had been made for them. The appeal in their behalf was met in a generous manner. General Jackson informed him that General Hill would remain in command at Harpers Ferry and would have control of such questions, but added: "If you have any difficulty with General Hill you can appeal to me." Thanking him and instructing the servants to keep in close quarters with the regiment and the officers to protect them till his return, he rode to Harpers Ferry and called on General Hill at his headquarters. Waiting patiently till D'Utassy finished discussing a claim for five surplus horses, which General Hill very properly refused to allow, he told the general he, too, had lost horses, but had called to present a matter of much more importance. He had learned from General Jackson that no provision had been made in the capitulation for the free colored servants. There were a number in his regiment who had accompanied it from Ohio, and perhaps others in the command. General Jackson had referred the matter to him.

General Hill said: "As great numbers had fled from the surrounding country to Harpers Ferry, it would be difficult to decide who was free and who was not; he would, therefore, leave it to the colonel's honor, and give him passes for whoever he said was free." Thanking the general for his courtesy and confidence, he returned to camp to communicate the glad tidings to men whose fears for their own safety had been increased by seeing hundreds of men, women, and children, bond and free, driven past, their bowed heads and sad countenances telling the tale of their disappointed hopes. When marching out the next day, he was detained at General Hill's headquarters in getting the passes for thirteen colored men connected with the Sixtieth Ohio by another horse claim of D'Utassy. On reaching the river he found the regiment halted, a rebel guard with crossed bayonets in front, several countrymen and a rebel major on horseback near the lines, and others on foot dragging the colored boys from their positions near the officers. He asked what all this meant. He was told in fierce tones, "He was a d——d nigger thief, stealing their slaves, and his command shouldn't pass until every d——d nigger was taken out." He told them they were free—he had passes for them from General Hill. "They swore they wouldn't regard the order of General Hill in such case." A citizen said: "General Hill's pass ought to be sufficient." The rebel major told him to "Shut his d——d mouth and attend to his own business." The moment for action had come. The quick, sharp, decisive words, "My men are unarmed; I am not. I'll sell my life for these free boys. Unhand them! Guards, give way! Regiments, march!" unloosed the grasp of these manstealers, sent the guards from the front and the regiment forward over the pontoon bridge with quick and steady tread. When safe on the Maryland side of the Potomac, these men, some of whom had families in Ohio, felt like a new birth of freedom had been vouchsafed them, and every officer and soldier sympathized with them in the joy of their deliverance.

The surrender of Harpers Ferry was investigated by an able military commission, of which Maj. Gen. D. Hunter was president. It was very severe in some of its findings, but it reported that no blame attached to Colonel Trimble.

Mr. FORAKER. I now call attention to a record of the Sixtieth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, as published by the State of Ohio in its roster of Ohio volunteers from the year 1861 to 1866. It appears from this roster, and from other statements that will be in the record, that this regiment was enlisted for one year. I do not know how the order happened to be made that it should be enlisted for a year, but its members were enlisted for only a year. They served faithfully, distinguishing themselves for their bravery and gallantry in every engagement in which they participated down to the last, which was an unfortunate one for them, at Harpers Ferry, where they were under the severest and hottest of the fire and where they displayed a bravery and gallantry for which they were commended in official reports. But they were captured there, along with the whole army, in spite of all this gallant regiment could do. They were paroled and finally exchanged and taken to Chicago to be mustered out. They were kept in camp there until they had served, as the roster will show, most of them, from three to four months longer than their one year's enlistment, and while they were there in camp doing nothing, not permitted to do anything, it seems, from what little I have been able to gather, that there was that kind of lax discipline and some cases of insubordination, such as would lead, perhaps, to their being ordered to be discharged at once. But they were all honorably discharged, and by the summary order, so far as I can gather from its hasty reading, it was summary only in the sense that they were ordered to be mustered out immediately instead of being kept there in the barracks.

The Roster of Ohio Soldiers, 1861–1866, War of the Rebellion, volume 5, Fifty-fourth to Sixty-ninth Regiments Infantry, pages 245–264, is preceded by the following historical notice:

SIXTIETH REGIMENT OHIO VOLUNTEER INFANTRY—ONE YEAR'S SERVICE.

This regiment was organized at Gallipolis, Ohio, February 25 and 28, 1862, to serve one year. It was mustered out of service November 10, 1862, in accordance with orders from the War Department.

The official list of battles in which this regiment bore an honorable part is not yet published by the War Department, but the following list has been compiled after careful research during the preparation of this work: Strasburg, Va., June 1–2, 1862; Harrisonburg, Va., June 6, 1862; Cross Keys, Va., June 8, 1862, and Harpers Ferry, Va., September 15, 1862.

Then follows the roster, and the record goes on to show that almost every man of them immediately enlisted in other regiments and went to the front, and every one of them made a good record as a soldier.

I knew the men of the Sixtieth Ohio. There were no better men in the Union Army. No braver soldiers followed the flag and no more gallant officer ever commanded a regiment than Col. William H. Trimble. I am sorry to hear that there is this kind of a fault in their record. It is the first time I ever heard of it. I was out in the field at the time myself and I did not happen to hear of it, and I never heard of it afterwards. Nobody in Ohio remembers the Sixtieth Ohio except only as a regiment that was gallant and brave and heroic and that won honor and glory for the flag on every field of battle where they were present. I think I shall have to introduce a bill to correct the record.

Now, Mr. President, I do not make any apology for taking the time I have occupied, but rather I apologize that I am not able this morning, owing to my inability, to go carefully through these exhibits and to make a more exhaustive discussion of authorities and to speak at greater length or with more effectiveness.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Then the members of the Sixtieth Ohio were not discharged without honor? If they had been discharged without honor, could they have reenlisted? Three of them were members of my company afterwards, and could they have reenlisted if they had been discharged without honor?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator found them, I venture to say, gallant soldiers, as brave as any. No, Mr. President, they were not dishonorably discharged nor discharged without honor. I have shown that they were honorably discharged. Such a discharge as "without honor" was never heard of in that day. Men were either honorably or dishonorably discharged. These men were of necessity honorably discharged, or they could not have reenlisted and won applause for their bravery and heroism.

Mr. President, I have said over and over again this is not a question that is confined to these men alone; much less is it a color question. I do not intend here, this morning, to enter upon that, and I hope I will not be provoked to enter upon it at any time in the discussion of this subject that is to follow. But if that question must be presented I think I can show that the Twenty-fifth Regiment, as is the case with every other colored regiment, has a good record for bravery, gallantry, and heroism. Only this morning an officer of the Army who served on the frontier told me that the negro troops are the only troops of the American Army who never failed to defeat the Indians when they met them in battle. There is not one single case where on meeting the Indians they did not drive them off the field and win the day. Their career has been one of honor from the beginning of our Government down to the present. Who can ever forget that the first blood of the Revolution was that of Crispus Attucks, who was stricken to death in the streets of Boston? And who in this body has not paused and looked upon the picture that hangs over the stairway on the eastern side of the Senate—Perry's Victory on Lake Erie? And who that has looked upon it has failed to observe that there, in that boat, at that hour of supremest peril, when Commodore Perry was trying to escape from a sinking ship, seeking safety on another, by the side of him in that boat was a man with a black face? I have not time to recount their deeds of gallantry and heroism as they are recorded in the history of the civil war, but on another occasion that will be done if it be necessary.

I do not ask that they be dealt with here, Mr. President, more generously than they should be, because of this gallant service, but I do ask that we will practice as well as profess the "square deal" for the black men who have given this country a "square deal" on every occasion when they have been called upon to serve it. At the proper time, I say, I shall speak of that, perhaps at some length, but I do not intend to do it now.

This morning I have undertaken to do only one thing. Having looked at this testimony, not because I have any personal or selfish interest to subserve, but because I regard it as a great question that is here involved which brings home to me, and every Senator here, a solemn duty, and having in that connection read and studied the testimony, I felt that it would be impossible for us to act intelligently and do justice unless we had some real testimony in this case. I want to see that gentleman who is "able to charge all hell with one bucket of water." I should like to cross-examine him, Mr. President. I should like to see some of the other "sterling citizens of Brownsville," and I should like to prove some things that nobody has said anything about yet, and I am not going to say anything about now, but some things that concern justice, that concern equity, that concern right, that concern the honor of the American Army.

For that reason, Mr. President, I now modify the resolution I offered yesterday by striking out the words which make it optional with the Committee on Military Affairs to take further testimony so as to make it a positive instruction that they shall take further testimony, and I will ask that the resolution may go over until we meet here after the holidays, when I shall make some remarks on the subject.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I myself do not wish to enter into this discussion until I have had opportunity to read further the communications from the President and Secretary of War, and to examine the evidence submitted, and I assume there will not be general discussion until other Senators have had opportunity to do likewise. I am informed by the superintendent of the document room that there will be available only about 200 copies of the message and testimony printed as in the document I now have in my hand. I therefore ask unanimous consent that an order be made by the Senate to print as many additional copies as can be printed within the Senate's limit of expenditure for printing of public documents, which, I believe, is $500.

The order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That as many additional copies of Senate Document No. 155, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, message of the President of the United States relating to the discharge or mustering out of regiments or companies, as will not exceed the sum of $500 be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no intention of discussing this question at the present time for the simple reason that I have not been able to read the testimony or examine the evidence on either side with any thoroughness. That somewhat thick volume contains it, and we only received it this morning.

I am not one of those who when they approach a new subject first make up their minds. I prefer, in approaching a new subject, to make up my mind after I have considered the testimony. Even from the rough glance that I have been able to give this testimony, as the Senator from Ohio has been laying it in fragments before the Senate, I observe that there are two sides, and I myself should like to be informed about both sides.

If this regiment or these companies are entirely innocent of the shooting with which they are charged, as the Senator from Ohio alleges——

Mr. FORAKER. No, Mr. President, I do not allege that. The Senator must allow me to correct him. I have not alleged that they are entirely innocent. I have simply alleged that the testimony upon which it is said their guilt is conclusively established is not satisfactory or conclusive, and that there ought to be further testimony taken. I think there is testimony to show that they are free from guilt, but I do not know what the facts are, and I want to find out.

Mr. LODGE. If they are entirely innocent of the offenses with which they are charged, then they have been the subject of the greatest possible injustice, and no one will be more anxious than I to do everything that is possible to vindicate them, to restore any rights they may have lost, and to redress in every possible way every wrong that they may have suffered. But if, Mr. President, they are guilty of the offenses that have been charged, then I think equal justice should be done to the President, the Secretary of War, and the Army officers who have been charged with this painful duty. I think there is a question not only of justice to these men, but that there is some justice due to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the officers who have made this investigation and presented these recommendations.

The President and the Secretary of War have given many weeks of consideration to this question. It is not conceivable that either of them would be influenced in the matter by any local or race prejudice. I do not think that they would have arrived at the conclusion at which they have arrived without some consideration or without strong evidence. I for one should like to have time to examine the evidence upon which they have acted.

The report has been presented by officers of the Army. I should be very slow to believe that any officer of the United States Army would be guilty of the unspeakable infamy of advising the removal of these men from the Army or holding them up to shame and punishment because that officer's father happened to be a Democrat. I believe it is incredible, Mr. President, that an officer of the Army, on a grave question like this, would deliberately falsify facts and make recommendations which would lead to great injury to innocent men because he happened to be born in the State of South Carolina. I do not remember, Mr. President, where the third officer—Colonel Lovering—was born; and I do not care where any of them was born or what the politics of their fathers happened to be. I believe, until it is shown to the contrary, that they are honorable men, doing their duty in an honorable way. They may be in error. It is very possible they are in error. "To err is human." But that they did not do their duty honorably I can not believe; and I think it is traveling a long way from the record to point out that the father of one of these officers was a Democrat.

Mr. President, I think these officers of the Army, and I think the President and the Secretary of War, are entitled to consideration. If, as I say, these men have been discharged from the Army without having been guilty of the offenses with which they are charged, there is no more important duty on each one of us than to see that that great wrong is redressed. But if they were properly removed from the Army and were guilty of the crimes charged against them, then it is equally our duty to sustain the Administration in what has been done.

I do not profess to judge. I have had no time to read the testimony in this thick volume. I have had no time to examine the statements of the officers or the testimony of any of the witnesses; but as I followed the Senator from Ohio, when he stated it was inconceivable that this regiment should have engaged in anything of this kind, I noted as I turned the pages over something absolutely unknown to me until I looked at the document—that this regiment since 1885 had "shot up" four towns. In 1885 it "shot up" the town of Sturgis, in Dakota Territory. Dr. H. P. Lynch was shot and instantly killed, and the soldier who committed the murder was caught and hanged by citizens of the town. Then the soldiers "shot up" the town. In 1899 they "shot up" the town of Winnemucca, in Nevada; in 1900 they "shot up" El Paso—"shot up" the jail and killed a policeman; in 1904—quite recently—they engaged in a deadly brawl at Niobrara and "shot up" the town of Valentine, according to one statement here, and in the affray lives were lost.

Mr. President, the men of that regiment may be absolutely innocent of what is charged against them in this case. I am not prepared to say; I have not read the evidence; but I think it is just as well, when it is stated that it is inconceivable that they should have committed this crime, that these official reports should go in the RECORD with the speech of the Senator from Ohio. Therefore I ask that the pages of this document, Senate Document 155, from page 315 to the middle of page 365, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Copies of documents on file in the War Department relating to instances of extraordinary misconduct or acts of violence committed by soldiers of the United States Army prior to the affray at Brownsville, Tex.

TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY—AFFAIR AT STURGIS CITY, DAK., SEPTEMBER 19–20, 1885.

STURGIS, DAK., September 25, 1885.

To the honorable the Secretary of War,
Washington, D. C.

(Through Commanding Officer, Fort Meade, Dak. T.)

DEAR SIR: This place is situated 1½ miles west of Fort Meade. At that post several companies of colored troops belonging to the Twenty-fifth Infantry are stationed. Owing to some grievance, real or imaginary, the members of these companies, or at least many of them, entertain an ill feeling toward some of the people of our town, and are taking vengeance by shooting down our citizens. On August 23 last Dr. H. P. Lynch was shot and instantly killed by one of these men while sitting in his office, and on the night of the 19th instant a squad of them, variously estimated at from 15 to 20 in number, entered the town and fired several volleys into buildings facing on the main street.

The fact that but one life was lost on this latter occasion is simply miraculous. The negroes were armed with Government rifles and supplied with Government ammunition. Our civil authorities are not able to cope with an armed force, and we therefore appeal to you to take such steps as you may deem proper to save our town from further outrage. We would respectfully suggest that these colored troops be removed from Fort Meade and replaced by white soldiers.

We are, sir, very respectfully, yours,

O. W. Jewett, justice of the peace; Max Hoehn, real estate agent; F. M. Allen, groceries; G. W. Pratt, physician; E. Galvin, clothier; Chas. H. Mueller, drugs; Charles Polk, attorney; H. H. Lorrimer, teacher; James Beatty, lumberman; Chas. C. Woody, Sturgis Weekly Record; H. P. Hannan, agent N. W. & S. & T. Co.; John Scollard, proprietor Sheridan House; William E. Jones, grocer; Frank Shaw, dry goods; Chas. G. Ingalls, jeweler; Michael Goeden, saloon; H. O. Alexander, cashier bank Stebbin Fox & Co.; F. H. Brown, bookkeeper; M. Blatt, wholesale liquors; Oscar Partlow, carpenter; H. O. Anderson, hardware, etc; O. H. A. Pinnio, stockman; A. J. Hosier, surveyor; V. M. Beaver, lumberman; E. Rupe, carpenter; G. J. Germain, stock breeder; H. C. Ash, real estate; J. A. Galer, stockman; J. C. McMullen, boot and shoe dealer; Will Ickes, clerk; F. T. Allabough, Northwestern Hotel; J. W. Patterson, butcher; W. E. Jones, grocery merchant; George W. Ladd, tinsmith; C. B. Farwell, stockman; W. C. Buderus, attorney; Patrick Florins, saloon; George N. Cole, liveryman; Calvin Duke, farmer; N. H. Loop, carpenter; J. W. Rodebank, farmer.

FORT MEADE, DAK. TER., September 25, 1885.

ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF DAKOTA,
Fort Snelling, Minn.

GENERAL: For the information of the department commander, I have the honor to transmit proceedings of a board of officers convened at this post for the investigation of a serious outrage committed by a portion of the colored troops of this post upon the town of Sturgis City on the night of the 19th or morning of the 20th instant. Four enlisted men of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, presumed to have belonged to this party, are now in the hands of the civil authorities.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. D. STURGIS,
Colonel Seventh Cavalry, Commanding.

Proceedings of a board of officers which convened pursuant to the following order, viz:

Orders, No. 218.

FORT MEADE, DAK. TER., September 20, 1885.

A board of officers will convene at 12 o'clock m. to-day, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to investigate and report the facts and circumstances connected with an outrage committed last night on the citizens and town of Sturgis City by a party of enlisted men from this post.

Detail for the board: Maj. S. M. Whitside, Seventh Cavalry; Capt. Miles Moylan, Seventh Cavalry; Capt. Henry Jackson, Seventh Cavalry; Capt. C. N. Gray, Twenty-fifth Infantry; Second Lieut. H. A. Leonhaeuser, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

By order of Colonel Sturgis:

JOHN W. WILKINSON,
First Lieutenant and Adjutant Seventh Cavalry, Post Adjutant.

FORT MEADE, DAK. T.,
September 20, 1885, 12 o'clock m.

The board met pursuant to the foregoing order, all the members present. Proceeding to the business required of it, the board proceeded to Sturgis City, Dak. T., and obtained the statements (voluntary) of the following witnesses, viz:

1. Thomas Cartwright (colored citizen).
2. Abe Hill, proprietor of colored dance hall in Sturgis, Dak. T.
3. J. H. Patterson (white), bartender for A. Hill.
4. Geo. Williams (white), night bartender for A. Hill.
5. —— Witherspoon (white), citizen of Sturgis.
6. William H. Eatsides (white), citizen of Sturgis.
7. Robert P. Barttery (white), citizen of Sturgis.

The board then adjourned to the post and met in session at 6.25 p. m. Present, all the members.

The board then examined the following-named witnesses:

1. Private Walker M. Wills, Troop K, Seventh Cavalry.
2. Private McMahon, Troop A, Seventh Cavalry.
3. Private F. Martinis, Troop A, Seventh Cavalry.

Board adjourned to meet at 1 p. m. following day.

MONDAY, September 21, 1885—1 p. m.

Board met pursuant to adjournment. Present, all the members.

Proceeding with the business required of it, the board examined the following witnesses:

1. Private Taylor, Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
2. Lieutenant Leonhaeuser, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
3. Corporal Fisher, Troop K, Seventh Cavalry.
4. Musician John Brown, Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
5. Private H. Hall, Company K, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
6. Lieutenant Ord, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

The board then adjourned to meet in Sturgis City at 5.15 p. m.

STURGIS CITY, DAK. T.,
September 21, 1885—5.15 p. m.

The board met—all of the members being present—and proceeded to examine the following persons:

1. Frankie Hill, sporting character at A. Hill's.
2. George Ridd (colored), works at A. Hill's.
3. John Warner (colored), works at A. Hill's.

The board then adjourned.

FORT MEADE, DAK. T.,
September 22, 1885—3.30 p. m.

The board met pursuant to call of its president. Lieutenant Leonhaeuser, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was reported as being absent as a witness before the United States district court in Deadwood, Dak. T. The board then, after due deliberation on the evidence adduced, and from their own observation, find the following facts, viz:

That, Saturday night, September 19, 1885, Private John Taylor, Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, had an altercation with one Abe Hill (colored), the proprietor or keeper of a bawdy dance house in Sturgis City, where the lower classes of white and colored citizens and soldiers congregate for their evening's entertainment or debauch; that this row, feud, or altercation, was not of sufficient importance or magnitude to awaken in minds of persons present the remotest thought of future trouble.

It appears in evidence that either Private Taylor, or Greer, both of Company H, after the row before mentioned, said, as they, in company with other men of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, left the dance hall in Abe Hill's, you will hear from us again; or, "You will hear from us again to-night." The board concluded that this was no unusual disturbance, as it is established that most of the occupants of this place (Abe Hill's) were in bed when, from the evidence before the board, it appears that a party of armed soldiers, variously estimated from 8, 10, 15, or 20 colored men in uniform, thimble belts on, with "long toms" in their possession, appeared in front of A. Hill's place; this body of men after calling out "Soldiers outside! We are going to shoot!" or words to that effect, did fire with powder and ball into aforesaid house of Abe Hill a number of shots variously estimated from 60 to 100, many of which were calculated or liable to kill or do bodily harm to the occupants of said house; that one citizen, Bob Bell by name, a supposed cowboy, while in said house, came to his death by a bullet directed from a rifle, carrying a 500-grain bullet, in the hands of Privates John Taylor, Pierce Greer, Evan Morris, and Smith Watson, Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and others in collusion with them; that the before-mentioned enlisted men of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, namely, Privates John Taylor, Smith Watson, Evan Morris, and Pierce Greer, all of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, were seen in the town of Sturgis City, Dak., on the night of Saturday, September 19, or Sunday morning, September 20, 1885, in soldier clothing, with guns (?) in their possession and (in line) with other colored soldiers in the streets of Sturgis City; that some of these men in line were seen to "fire;" others, namely, Taylor and Greer, gave recognized commands; that the result of this firing was the killing of Citizen Bob Bell; numerous bullets hit through A. Hill's saloon and dance hall, and a few shots (either strayed or intended) through and in the building occupied by a man known as "Jonnie Dolan." This man is keeper of a low bawdyhouse of ill fame where both white and colored people congregate. The evidence before the board evinces doubt as to whether the men engaged in the firing intentionally shot into Dolan's place or as to the reasonable doubt of stray shots.

Summing up all the evidence that the board has been able to obtain, the board finds "that the outrage committed on the citizens of Sturgis City on last Saturday night was entirely confined to 'Abe Hill's and Jonnie Dolan's' place in Sturgis City, and was entirely confined to the members of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry. Evidence adduced shows that an armed body of colored soldiers, variously estimated from 8 to 20, all of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, were in the town of Sturgis City, Dak.; that this armed party fired on A. Hill's place and Jonnie Dolan's place with result as stated. The board examined the house of A. Hill and Jonnie Dolan, and found the dead body of Cowboy Bell, and also numerous shot holes in both buildings."

"The animus of the whole affair was seemingly directed toward Abe Hill's place, where shots were fired both front and rear."

Further than this the board is unable to state.

S. M. WHITSIDE,
Major, Seventh Cavalry.
MILES MOYLAN,
Captain, Seventh Cavalry.
HENRY JACKSON,
Captain, Seventh Cavalry.
CYRUS N. GRAY,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

There being no further business before it, the board adjourned sine die.

S. M. WHITSIDE,
Major, Seventh Cavalry.
CYRUS N. GRAY,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Approved.

DEADWOOD, DAK., September 27, 1885.

MR. PRESIDENT: You have no doubt read of the attack made by some fifteen or twenty of the colored regiment at Fort Meade on some houses in the town of Sturgis. Sturgis is about 13 miles from here, on the road to Fort Meade, which is about a mile farther. These colored soldiers infest Sturgis at night and are the support of a lot of vile negro girls and women, who congregate at a drinking den called a "dance house." I understand that rows and fights are of constant occurrence in and about this house, and the people of the town are kept in constant dread by the firing of pistols and the yells of these negroes at night. Some weeks ago a negro soldier went to the drug store of Doctor Lynch, an old citizen of the place. The doctor was sitting in his store reading a paper, and this fellow took deliberate aim at him through the window and shot him dead. The soldier fled, but the crowd took him after his capture and hung him. Of course nothing can justify this grave infraction of the law in not allowing him a trial and letting the law vindicate itself. I happened to be at the fort last Saturday night when this last wholesale shooting took place. I was standing in front of General Sturgis's quarters talking with him. We were about going into the house, when Lieutenant Sickles approached with a sergeant, and told the general that he had seen some fifteen or twenty colored soldiers going toward Sturgis with their guns. General Sturgis immediately ordered Lieutenant Sickles to take a detachment of his men and go at once and bring them back.

A few minutes afterwards another lieutenant came to the house and said he had heard firing from the direction of Sturgis, but thought it was at the "Half Way House." The general then ordered him to take another detachment and arrest the soldiers. In about a half hour afterwards a horseman came riding up in great haste and informed the general that the soldiers had fired into "Abe Hill's" house and killed an inoffensive cowboy who was standing there, and that they had also fired volleys into one or two other houses. General Sturgis then ordered that Captain Ord should make a check roll call, examine the arms, and bring in such as had the appearance of being recently fired. This was done. But the fellows had scampered back by short cuts over the hills and gotten into their bunks before the roll call, which disclosed the absence of only three, who, I think, were satisfactorily accounted for.

The inclosed extracts which I have made from the Deadwood papers, being the only papers I have seen, will give a more particular account of what occurred at the shooting, and of which I know nothing except from hearsay. General Sturgis next morning constituted a board of investigation from the officers and sent them to Sturgis. They took testimony for two days and succeeded in identifying only four of the offenders. They were brought here and lodged in jail. A special grand jury has been called to act upon these and other cases. I am satisfied, Mr. President, from what I learn from the officers at Fort Meade that this colored regiment is composed in part of a set of reckless desperadoes, and that the service would be benefited by their removal to some station farther removed from a town than Sturgis City is from Fort Meade, and where the temptation to leave their quarters for drink and carousing will be removed.

Sturgis City has a population of about 800 and the town and the regiment are no doubt of mutual disadvantage to each other. A feeling of distrust now exists among the people of Sturgis, and I fear they may be constantly tempted to acts of violence which their fears may engender, and which may not be warranted except by the memory of past outrages on the part of the soldiers. I have no doubt, too, from what I have heard, that the soldiers have met sometimes with outrages from a class of scoundrels who will congregate in such towns from different localities for the purpose of fleecing and robbing the soldiers about pay day, and for which the good citizens are not responsible.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. G. CAULFIELD.

[From the Daily Times.]

DIABOLICAL—A PLATOON OF COLORED SOLDIERS FROM FORT MEADE VISITS STURGIS, FIRING INTO A BUILDING WITH MILITARY PRECISION, INSTANTLY KILLING ROBERT S. BELL, AN UNOFFENDING COWBOY—NINE SUSPECTS IN CUSTODY—THOROUGH INVESTIGATION ORDERED.

Another dastardly outrage was perpetrated at Sturgis between 1 and 2 o'clock Sunday morning by a detachment of colored soldiers, members of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, resulting in the instant death of Robert S. Bell, a cowboy connected with the 7D, Clark Tingley's outfit. As yet meager particulars only are obtainable, but sufficient to show that a more dastardly crime was never committed in the Hills.

Ever since the lynching of Corporal Hollis for assassination of Doctor Lynch the colored soldiers have cherished bitter enmity toward certain citizens of Sturgis, including William Souter and George Cole, and it is thought that the event of Sunday morning is the result thereof. Be this as it may, about 1 o'clock a body, estimated all the way from fifteen to twenty-five strong, armed with their rifles, quietly left the post and in military order proceeded to Abe Hill's dance house, in front of which they quietly wheeled into line, when the leader gave, in quick succession, the commands, "Prepare to load; load; aim and aim low; fire!" A terrific volley resulted, followed by great excitement throughout the town, during which the soldiers quietly disappeared.

In the saloon at the time were four or five men at cards and Robert S. Bell. The latter had entered only a few minutes before and was engaged playing a banjo when the volley poured into the building, one bullet striking him in the breast and passing entirely through the heart and body, causing instant death. All others within the room escaped injury.

Coroner Wright and Undertaker Smith repaired to Sturgis a few hours later, where the coroner proceeded to hold an inquest, still in progress. Mr. Smith returned with the corpse in the evening.

Deceased was about 28 years of age and of fine appearance. His father, William H. Bell, an architect at York, Nebr., was apprised by wire of the death of his son and directed that the remains be interred here.

GENERAL STURGIS ACTIVE.

From a gentleman who reached Deadwood at 11 o'clock last evening we gather the following: As General Sturgis was engaged with a friend who arrived by the coach at 1 o'clock, Lieutenant Sickle and a sergeant approached, the latter with the announcement that a squad of colored soldiers, heavily armed, had just left the post for Sturgis. The general thereupon ordered the lieutenant to proceed with a detail from his company and intercept the truants, and, that no time should be lost, to go dismounted. Shortly thereafter Lieutenant Leanhauser reported having heard firing in the direction of Sturgis. The lieutenant was thereupon directed to proceed with another detail as quickly as possible and arrest all soldiers absent without leave.

Lieutenant Ord was directed to cause a check-roll call; to lie in wait for and arrest all absentees on returning; to examine all arms, delivering to the general such as indicated recent firing, and to make every effort to apprehend the offenders.

A check-roll call disclosed only three absentees, but upward of a dozen rifles gave evidence of recent use.

On yesterday a board of inquiry was organized, with instructions to leave no stone unturned in an endeavor to solve the mystery. Thus far nine men have been arrested, and the remainder soon will be. They all belong to Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry. General Sturgis deserves the thanks of the community for his prompt and judicious action, and his determination to bring the guilty parties to justice.

The coroner and the board of inquiry are working in concert, and no conclusion will be reached before this evening at the earliest.

THE STURGIS HOMICIDE.

The coroner's inquest in the Sturgis homicide case resulted in a verdict that deceased came to his death at the hands of parties, some of whom are in custody and others unknown. The board of inquiry, created by order of General Sturgis, continued its labors until upward of sixteen arrests were made, the prisoners being confined in the guardhouse at Fort Meade, and taken one at a time for examination before Justice Jewett at Sturgis. Evidence against a number of the men is direct and conclusive.

The funeral of the late Robert S. Bell, victim of the outrage, was held from Smith's undertaking establishment, Sherman street, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The body, neatly dressed, rested in a silver-mounted casket, and was viewed by a large number of citizens. It was a pleasant face to look upon, the features indicating great intellectuality and good parentage. Interment took place in Mount Moriah.

Sheriff Garland, Deputy Dix, and the four colored men, soldiers, accused of the murder of Robert S. Bell, came in from the post yesterday, escorted by Lieutenant Cress and a detachment of the Seventh Cavalry. The defendants, Taylor, Greer, Morris, and Watson, each waived an examination and were held by Justice Jewett without bonds, to await the action of the grand jury.

[From the Pioneer.]

TUESDAY MORNING, September 21, 1885.

The coroner's jury in the case of Robert Bell returned the following verdict yesterday morning:

"The said jurors upon their oaths do say that the said Robert S. Bell came to his death by a gunshot wound fired by a squad of United States soldiers, members of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry (colored), led by John Taylor and Pierre Greer, privates, and of whom John Taylor, Pierre Greer, Evans Morris, and Smith Watson were recognized on the morning of September 20, 1885, in Abe Hill's dance house in Sturgis City, Dak. T.

"E. T. MARSHALL,
"N. T. WITCHER,
"J. T. SLY,
"Jurymen."

Immediately after the finding of the jury a complaint was filed by the coroner in Justice Jewett's court, a warrant issued, and defendant Watson was brought up from the guardhouse at Fort Meade by Deputy Sheriff June Dix, escorted by eight members of the Seventh Cavalry, who stood in line in front of the office until the prisoner had waived examination and a commitment to the Lawrence County jail without bonds had been made out, and the prisoner was loaded up and started for the prison lockup. The other three prisoners were then brought up for preliminary examination, and if waived they would be brought up to the county jail with a guard of one company of cavalry. There seems to be a disposition on the part of the sheriff and General Sturgis to protect the prisoners from mob violence, and we think they are acting wisely.

The following is a synopsis of the evidence given to the coroner's jury:

Doctor Pratt testified that the ball, after passing through a 4-inch square awning post and the front of a building, entered the body of deceased between the ninth and tenth ribs and passed obliquely through the body and out through the lower portion of the sternum, dropping between the body and the clothing, and in its passage through the body injuring the heart, which was the cause of death.

R. T. Barthey testified that he was standing in front of Dolan's saloon about 2 o'clock Sunday morning when he saw a squad of soldiers marching in order up Main street, under command of an officer, with their guns at a trail, held in their right hands. When in front of Abe Hill's place they, at the command, halted and formed in line; some one hollowed, "Is there any soldiers in there? If there is, get out of the door; we are going for the house," and they then commenced firing.

After firing a few volleys they about-faced and started down street. In front of Dolan's place they were haled and a voice said, "Let us give Jonnie Dolan, the s—— of a b——, a round," and they fired a volley in his house. I heard the whiz and spat of balls and the tingling of broken glass. After firing a volley they re-formed and marched up to Hill's place again, where they halted and the command, "Ready, load, fire," was given, and several volleys were fired into the building. There was a drag in the firing, and some one said, "Let us all fire together," and the same order was given—"Ready, load, fire," and volleys were repeated, several of them, at the lower part of the house. The firing ceased, and a voice said, "Here is Souter and Cole; we will lay out the s—— of b——." Ranks were broken, and they went upstreet and disappeared. I went into the house after they were gone and found a cowboy dead—shot through the body.

James W. Patterson testified that at an early hour that morning he heard loud talking in the street, stepped to the door, and saw John Taylor, a member of Company H, stepping off the platform, going toward a line of men standing in the street—fifteen or twenty of them. He recognized Privates John Taylor, Pierre Greer, Evans Morris, and Smith Watson, all of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry. Greer gave an order and they fired a volley in the direction of the upper portion of the house. Soon after this first volley a voice said, "What do you want, you s—— of a b——?" and a shot was fired, and soon afterwards several shots were fired. The voice he did not recognize, and it was evidently directed to some one in the house, and he thought to deceased, Bell. Some one then proposed to go down and give Dolan a round, and they went. He heard them say, "Let us go for Souter and Cole and fix them."

John Warner was in the house at the time of the firing and recognized the voice of Greer commanding, "Ready, aim, fire," followed by a volley that came into the house. He also recognized Private Taylor in the party.

Andrew Wetherspoon was in the room at the time the shots were fired, and saw Bell clasp his hands across his breast and heard him exclaim, "My God! I am killed," and saw him cross the room and fall out of the back door. Bell died twenty minutes after being shot.

George Read was in the room at the time Bell was shot, and saw him fall out of the back door. He saw and recognized Taylor, Greer, and Watson, with guns in their hands, in the crowd of soldiers.

George Williams was in the room at the time, and they all heard a noise in the street, and all but himself passed out at the front door. Through the open door he saw Taylor standing on the sidewalk with a gun in his hands.

Thomas Cartwright was in the house at the time the soldiers formed in the street, and he heard Taylor say, "Now, boys, we must all fire together." He heard them propose to go down and give Dolan a volley. He recognized Taylor, Morris, Green, and Watson in the crowd, and Taylor was commander of the squad.

Abe Hill was in bed when the firing commenced, but he got up and recognized the voices of Taylor and Green in the street. Taylor hollowed to him to "come on up to Fiddler's tree; we will meet you there," and Green said, "Cole and Souter, we want to see you up at Fiddler's tree."

William Havisides was in the house at the time of the firing, was close to Bell when he was shot, and saw him stagger across the room and fall out of the back door. He recognized Taylor and Green in the party.

There was a large amount of evidence given that pertained to threats that were made that night, but the above synopsis covers the material evidence given. It was thought that Watson would squeal and tell what he knew of the affray, but when brought into court yesterday his mouth was closed; he had nothing to say and waived examination.

FIXED AMMUNITION.

We have often heard of fixed ammunition and supposed it was cartridges such as are sold in the market "fixed" for the gun. During the late excitement in Sturgis the court of inquiry found some of the empty shells in the street that had been fired by the soldiers and they seemed elated over the fact that it was fixed ammunition. We started in to get the bottom facts on fixed ammunition, and seeing the guard of honor detailed to escort Watson to the law mill yesterday, we approached him and struck up a talk. We asked him to explain the term "fixed," at the same time drawing a cartridge from his belt. A sergeant in command, about 300 feet high, saw our civilian hand caressing the little messenger of death, and he reached for us, at the same time ordering the return of the cartridge to the belt, and we returned it and crawled upon the porch to prevent annihilation. He was evidently a mighty man of war, and we are glad we are not an Indian to have him turned loose upon our tepee.

This was all in Scoop.

MURDER—A SQUAD OF DRUNKEN COLORED SOLDIERS SHOOT PROMISCUOUSLY AND KILL A COWBOY.

STURGIS CITY, September 20, 1885.

To the editor of the Pioneer:

It is Sunday evening and a holy quiet of the calm after the storm pervades the town.

We are again called upon to chronicle the death of a fellow-mortal, and by violence—a cold-blooded murder—and it is not yet known who the assassin is, although there is proof that everybody hopes will prove conclusive as to who the guilty party is.

To go back a little, it will be remembered that Doctor Lynch, an old, respected citizen, was foully murdered in this place a little over a month ago, and very soon afterwards Corporal Hallon, a colored soldier, who was suspected of the crime—in fact, the evidence was almost conclusive that he was the guilty party—was taken from the jail in night-time and lynched.

The colored soldiers at that time believed him innocent, and many of them vowed vengeance against not only several parties they supposed had a hand in it, but against the entire town. Many of the people were of the opinion that they would carry their threats into execution, but the greater proportion of them thought that it was but idle talk.

About 2 o'clock this morning, to the great surprise of everyone at that time, a squad of colored soldiers, from 15 to 20 in number, armed with their breech-loading rifles, appeared on the street and began an indiscriminate firing into the houses on the south side of Main street. Not less than 100 shots were fired in all, and from the looks of the houses the bullets were large and propelled with great force. Abe Hill's house shows where many of them went, there being holes in the front, in the ceiling of the rooms, and, in fact, all over.

One of the balls passed through a 4-inch square awning post in front, through the front of the building, and out through the side of the house.

Another ball passed through another awning post, through the front of the house, and through a man's body who was standing in the room, killing him instantly. In the next house a ball passed in through an open door up through the ceiling and through a partition in the upper story, that deflected the ball down through the floor and dropped upon a bed in which a man was sleeping.

Johnnie Dolan's place also received a volley that wrecked the chandeliers and windows badly. The lamps and chandeliers in all of the houses along on this row were made targets of by them and most of them were knocked into smithereens.

As soon as word could be got to the post two companies of cavalry were sent up, and they soon rounded up the colored troops and lodged them in the guardhouse. They remained on duty until daylight and patrolled the town. Some indignation is felt at the post commander for permitting the arms and ammunition to be left where they had such easy access to them, but he is in no wise responsible for it. Racks are placed in each company's barracks in which their arms are kept, and these racks can be locked up, making it impossible to get out the rifles without removing the padlocks. The post commander, we understand, issued an order that the arms be kept under lock and key by the first sergeant of each company, but the order was countermanded by General Terry, and the locks were removed.

The officers of the post have started in in earnest to ascertain, if possible, every man who was absent that night with a gun, and they now have at least 17 men in the calaboose, all of them members of Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

A commission was detailed early this morning, consisting of Major Whiteside, Captain Moylan, Captain Jackson, Lieutenant Leonhauser, and Captain Gray. They constitute what is called a court of inquiry, and they have been at work all day examining witnesses and getting every bottom fact possible. They report that they have learned who at least a half dozen of the culprits are, and will fasten the crime on others of them before they conclude.

They will report in the morning to the commanding officer, who will place in the hands of the coroner, who arrived here about noon, impaneled a jury, and adjourned until to-morrow morning, the names of witnesses, the facts as ascertained, and the names of the suspected parties. In this the officers and commandant have shown a commendable spirit in the manner in which they are assisting the civil authorities.

The unfortunate young man who was thus so quickly removed to his long home was Robert S. Bell, a cowboy, in the employ of Clark Tingley. His parents reside in York, Nebr. From a letter written by his father, that arrived here Saturday night, we learn that his father is an architect, an educated man, who, on account of his wife's failing health, has sold out and will remove to California during the month of October. He wanted his son to come and go with them and requested an immediate answer, but he will receive instead a telegram from Undertaker Smith announcing his death.

The young man was standing in the back room, close to the wall, peeping through the window, over the blinds, into the street, when the volley was fired from the street, one of the balls of which, as before stated, passed through the awning post, the front of the house, and through his heart, lodging in his clothes, where it was found by Doctor Pratt. At the conclusion of the firing in the street, one of them was heard to say: "Now, boys, we'll find Souter and Cole and settle with them at Fiddler's tree."

The general feeling here is that Judge Church should order a special grand jury impaneled at once, and investigate this case thoroughly and promptly; otherwise there may again be a resort to mob violence, so greatly deplored by every one.

ANON.

FROM CORONER WRIGHT.

STURGIS CITY, September 21, 1885.

The excitement attending the killing of young Bell on Sunday morning has by no manner of means subsided, but, on the contrary, is becoming more and more intensified. It is the one subject of conversation with business men and citizens generally. There is a determined feeling that the colored troops must go or keep out of town. The discipline at the post is vehemently denounced, all persons claiming that if a guard is kept, as is supposed, that guard should have known when 15 or 20 armed men went out and should have reported it. They also claim that this portion of the Regular Army are stationed here to protect life and property on the frontier, and not for the purpose of making armed raids at the dead hour of midnight upon unarmed and peaceable citizens. A public meeting of citizens will be held this evening, at which some action will be taken to relieve them of the dread of violence that now threatens.

Two things will be recommended, the first: That no colored troops be allowed in town after sundown, and means will be employed to make their visits so uncomfortable that they will not desire to come the second time. The other is that the Secretary of War be petitioned to remove them to some other post and send white men in their places. In the latter they will ask the cooperation of the citizens of the belt.

A blacksmith, a soldier, a member of the Seventh Cavalry, committed suicide last night at the post by shooting himself in the head. The only reason we have heard assigned was his arrest on some trivial charge that so preyed upon his mind that in a moment of temporary insanity he did the deed.

It is a little amusing to hear the old bums around this town tell of the many hairbreadth escapes they each had on the night of the raid. "Do you see that post there in the street? I was sitting on that when they marched up Main street, and when they halted in front of me and the order 'Ready, aim, fire.' was given, and the fragments of broken glass and wooden splinters filled the air, I never budged, but stayed it out. I tell you I played in big luck that night to not get plugged," and they all tell the same story and gather in crowds and give in their experience.

They all agree that the commands were "Guide left by fours; right oblique by fours; ready, aim, fire. Aim low, boys," and all such bosh, and each one of them tells of bullets fanning their cheeks, tipping their ears, and passing between their arms and bodies. They are, to say the least, amusing liars.

This forenoon we visited our old Deadwood friend, Charles E. Downer, at his brewery on the dead line, between this place and the post. He has a small, neatly arranged brewery, and manufactures the best foaming beer and stock ale ever before made in the Hills. The stock ale is really superb, excelled by none we ever sampled.

The coroner's inquest is progressing very slowly. Three p. m. this afternoon has been set for the examination of the witnesses, and it is hoped no further postponement will be necessary. The court of inquiry, consisting of five officers of the post, have been at work since early Sunday morning, and they think they will be able to report the names of the witnesses and the facts ascertained from them by 4 o'clock p. m. to-day.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF DAKOTA,

Respectfully returned to the Adjutant-General of the Army, through the headquarters of the Division of the Missouri.

The inclosed letter is, in the main, a just and temperate account of the occurrences at Sturgis City and Fort Meade, of which it speaks. I should take exception to but one of the statements which Mr. Caulfield makes. He states, as an ascertained fact, that "Doctor Lynch" was assassinated by a colored soldier. Doubtless he is fully convinced of the truth of this statement; but I submit that the inclosed copy of a report from Colonel Sturgis of the testimony given before the coroner's jury impaneled to determine the cause of Doctor Lynch's death shows that while a case of grave suspicion was made out against the soldier Hallon, the evidence was by no means conclusive. Of course, since the brutal murder of Hallon by the mob of Sturgis City, it has been impracticable to determine the question of his guilt or innocence. I inclose a copy of the proceedings of a board of officers convened by order of Colonel Sturgis to inquire into the facts connected with the killing of Bell. The conclusions of the board confirm the statements of Mr. Caulfield.

It is not probable that all the persons who were concerned in the murder of Bell will be detected and punished. Four men have been arrested, and if the evidence against them be sufficient to establish their guilt they will, without doubt, be confined and tried. In their cases the machinery of the law will act speedily.

I do not recommend the removal of the colored troops from Fort Meade. It is not alleged that they, as a body, have committed any crime or have been guilty of any disorder. Certain men belonging to one of the companies are accused of a most serious crime, but there is nothing to connect with it the other men of their company or any of the men of the other companies. There is no evidence to show that the peace of Sturgis City, in the future, is threatened by any of them. I do not believe that it is seriously threatened by them.

I have had much experience with colored troops, and I have always found them as well behaved and as amenable to discipline as any white troops that we have. The characteristic submissiveness of their race is manifested in the readiness with which they yield to military control.

They are much more temperate than our white troops, and crime and disorders resulting from intoxication are comparatively rare among them.

The situation at Fort Meade is an unfortunate one. It is very undesirable that a military post and a frontier town should stand in such close proximity to each other as Sturgis City and Fort Meade do; unfortunate possibly for the town, unquestionably unfortunate for the post. But the post was established before the town was founded, and I do not think that there would have been any town but for the post. Still the evils which result from this juxtaposition are not absolutely unavoidable.

The military authorities at the post will, I am sure, do their part to prevent the commission of crime, and if the civil authorities of the town will do theirs as well there will be no occasion whatever for apprehension.

I take it for granted that in the Territory of Dakota the keeping of houses of ill-fame is prohibited by law, but notwithstanding the law there are in the town two brothels which would appear to have been established for the express purpose of catering to the taste and pandering to the passions of the colored troops, for they are "stocked" with colored prostitutes—negresses and mulattoes.

They are, I am assured, places of the vilest character, and it was at one of them that the affray of September 19 occurred. Had no such place existed it is most improbable that any affray would have occurred, and if the people of Sturgis City suffer such places to exist they must, I submit, expect the natural result of their existence—frequent broils, and from time to time the commission of the most serious crimes. And I submit further that until the people of the town shall have suppressed these dens, which equally debauch the troops of the post and threaten their own safety, they will not be in a position to ask the Government to change its garrison.

FORT MEADE, DAK. T., October 28, 1885.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, DEPT. DAKOTA,
Fort Snelling, Minn.:

Doctor Lynch was killed by shooting about 11 p. m., August 22, whilst reading in his office, the assassin firing through closed office door. Supposed cause, jealousy of colored woman.

Evidence before coroner's jury circumstancial; that of Private Bluford, A Company, Twenty-fifth Infantry, the most damaging given against Corporal Hallon, was to effect that he met Hallon at 10.30 p. m. at Abe Hill's saloon, Sturgis City; Hallon asked witness to drink and went into alley and drank from bottle; met Hallon next in dance hall (Abe Hill's); took witness into alley and persuaded him to change blouses. After blouses were changed Hallon told witness to meet him at point on outskirts of town, toward Meade.

Separated in alley ten minutes thereafter to meet at point designated. Hallon stoned his dog to make him follow witness. Witness met Private Martines, A, Seventh Cavalry, on his way to place of meeting, and tried to borrow pistol from him, saying he feared trouble with Hallon, whose conduct was suspicious. After being at place fixed for meeting ten minutes, heard shot in town and walked toward town.

Met Corporal Raymond, Seventh Cavalry. Then waited a moment and heard voice calling him. Recognized Hallon's voice. This at place of meeting, about five minutes after shot was fired. Upon meeting changed blouses. Hallon putting on his own and refused to say what trouble was. Witness noticed six-shooter at this time in Hallon's pocket. Went back to town with Hallon. On way Hallon pulled out pistol and seemed to be loading it, saying he feared trouble. On reaching town found Lynch had been killed. While in jail with Hallon, latter told him what to swear to, and to stick to his story, which was not that given to jury. Private Martines, A Troop, and Corporal Raymond, C Troop, corroborated Bluford in that they had met him at place fixed for his meeting Corporal Hallon, and at time described by Bluford.

That witness was wearing a noncommissioned officer's blouse, and had conversation with Martines about pistol. Private Rann, A Company, testified to loaning of pistol identified as one carried by Hallon night of 22d; loaned it night of 21st and 22d, Hallon returning it to him on morning of 23d, after murder. All chambers loaded when loaned and empty when returned. Carried same size and weight of bullet as bullet which killed Lynch.

Corporal Hallon was arrested on 23d August, on warrant duly served, and taken from jail in Sturgis City on night of 25th August and hanged.

Jury found that Lynch came to his death at hand of Hallon. This verdict and evidence all information known to be in possession of mob which hanged Hallon.

STURGIS, Commanding.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 22, 1885.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 27th of September last, commenting upon the outrages committed at the town of Sturgis, Dak. Ter., by colored soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Fort Meade, and suggesting the removal of the colored troops to some other post and the substitution of white soldiers in their place, I have the honor to invite attention to the inclosed copy of the report of Gen. A. H. Terry, commanding the Department of Dakota, to whom the matter was referred, and to say that both the Department and the Lieutenant-General of the Army concur in the views as expressed therein by General Terry.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 2, 1899.

Major-General SHAFTER,
San Francisco, Cal.:

C. D. Van Duzer, district attorney, Humboldt County, Nev., telegraphs that armed soldiers, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry, allowed to leave trains at Winnemucca, Nev., destroy property, and shoot citizens.

Investigate at once and report. No person must be allowed to escape punishment for wrongdoing.

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 2, 1899.

SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.:

Van Duzer wired me last night as to disorders committed by soldiers Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry; replied that Twenty-fifth Infantry had already sailed when report received; that so far as Twenty-fourth was concerned an investigation would be made at once, which will be done. Will send judge-advocate of department to Winnemucca to collect evidence, and if case warrants it would recommend that stoppage be made against the entire command, as authorized in General Orders 30 of '68. Proper guards could not have been posted over train.

SHAFTER, Major-General.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE,
San Francisco, Cal., July 13, 1899.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of my investigation of the disorders "said to have been committed by United States troops" at Winnemucca, Nev., on the evening of the 29th day of June, 1899. As required by my instructions, I visited the Presidio on the 3d instant, and after completing my inquiry there proceeded, on the 5th instant, to the scene of the disturbance, arriving at Winnemucca on the early morning of the 6th.

About 7.30 p. m. of the 29th of June the second section of a special westbound train carrying companies L and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and Company K, Twenty-fourth Infantry, Major Noble, Twenty-fifth Infantry, commanding, arrived at Winnemucca. The officers proceeded at once to take supper at the Lafayette Hotel, near the railway track and two blocks in rear of the train. The last of the fifteen coaches composing the train were about opposite the station house or "depot," and this in turn was opposite Berte Klucny's saloon, 50 yards away on the north side of the track. On coming to a full stop, the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, who occupied the rear coaches, left the train in large numbers, no restraint being imposed upon them. They dispersed through the town, causing no trouble except in Klucny's saloon, where a crowd assembled, and, according to the affidavit of H. W. Skinner and John May, filed herewith, marked A and B, soon became boisterous and practically took possession of the bar. Several other citizens were in the saloon, but, like Skinner and May, they left it, fearing trouble. No one saw who did the shooting.

Daylight had now so faded that only flashes of the discharges (five to eight in number) were seen. It is admitted by Klucny that no shooting occurred until the men left the saloon. After the shooting the enlisted men dispersed quickly, running for their coaches. In the meantime some one had gone to the Lafayette Hotel and apprised the officers there at supper of the shooting, but before they could reach the scene of the disturbance the men were in their coaches. When the shooting occurred "Berte" Klucny was behind his bar and his assistant, Chris Wilhelm Deiss, was standing in front of a gate leading behind the bar, when he received a pistol shot, the nature of which is described in a letter by his attending physician, W. M. Samuels, M. D., herewith.

The subscriber witnessed Doctor Samuels dress the wound, which answers to his written description. It was deemed unadvisable to question Deiss regarding the affair at this time, when any excitement might create a feverish condition, which his physician is slightly apprehensive may yet set in. The room where the shot took effect is about 20 by 20 feet, plainly furnished with wood table, chairs, and bar. A plain wood-framed mirror, having a glass 2 by 5 feet, and a few liquor glasses and decanting bottles constituted the bar equipment. The mirror had not been repaired, and remained as broken on the night of the disturbance. "Berte" Klucny refused to give the undersigned an itemized list of property taken and destroyed, he having been instructed by District Attorney C. D. Van Duzer, who is his attorney, not to answer questions.

In a general way he affirmed that his "bottled goods" and the cigars arranged behind his bar were all taken, his decanters and glasses of all kinds smashed, the prepared food, cakes, etc., in the restaurant part of his establishment looted. The dining room is off the saloon, in the door to which Deiss fell when wounded.

Assuming all this to be true, $100 would be a liberal compensation for property loss suffered by Klucny. The most serious injury is that done to Deiss. Loss of time in his employment, doctor's bill, the apprehension and pain suffered, all call for redress. The undersigned obtained from Deiss the ball taken from his body, and on testing it on an apothecary's balance found it to be 8 grains lighter than the service pistol bullet. The ball was flattened and enlarged about the forward end, and it is possible the slight difference in weight is due to abrasion. The service pistol bullet is, however, hollowed at the rear, to act as gas check on discharge of the cartridge, while the bullet taken from the body of Deiss was evidently solidly molded, it giving no evidence of having been countersunk.

While these facts raise a doubt as to the character of the pistol used, and by so far leaves the theory open that some of the citizens standing by might have fired the shot which took effect upon the person of Deiss, it still remains true that some of the soldiers might have carried pistols other than the service pistol, and that the weight of the facts so far known strongly favor the presumption that the shot was fired by one of the soldiers.

In this relation it is but just to add that Company K of the Twenty-fourth Infantry was not permitted to leave their coaches in a body. The first sergeant and quartermaster-sergeant were, however, given authority by Captain Cabaniss, commanding, to let trusted men leave the coach when the train stopped. Captain Cabaniss had left Fort Assiniboine some days before, traveling alone with his command to Ogden, and during the trip kept guards over the doors of the coaches occupied by his men. He continued this method after joining Major Noble's command at Ogden. His noncommissioned officers hold, and the citizens at Winnemucca admit, this company gave no trouble. While this does not make it conclusive that a man of this company could not have done the shooting, the evidence is conclusive that reasonable precautions were observed by Captain Cabaniss to prevent depredations on the part of his men.

In reply to direct questions, Captain Cabaniss informed the undersigned that he heard nothing said about an officer of the day or guard in Major Noble's command, but did hear, in a general way, that company commanders were held responsible for the conduct of their men. He also affirmed that the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry appeared to have liberty to leave the train in any numbers whenever it stopped. An account of the conduct of the affair by the "Silver State," published in Winnemucca on the 30th of June, is inclosed.

As companies L and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry, were on board transport at sea bound for Manila before complaint was made of their conduct at Winnemucca, the following conclusions as to the facts must of necessity rest upon ex parte information:

First. No officer of the day or guard were on duty with Major Noble's command on the 29th of June, 1899.

Second. The enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were permitted to leave the train without restraint or watchful supervision when absent therefrom.

Third. That the destruction of property and wounding of Christopher Wilhelm Deiss, in "Berte" Klucny's saloon, are due to the disorderly conduct and criminal actions of the enlisted men of Companies L and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Fourth. That after the event the commanding officer made due effort to identify the guilty parties.

Very respectfully,

S. W. GROESBECK,
Judge-Advocate, United States Army.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, Cal., July 15, 1899.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army, with recommendation that $250 be stopped from officers and enlisted men of Companies L and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and paid to Mr. C. W. Deiss, barkeeper of Berte Klucny's saloon.

No remuneration for damages to Klucny's saloon should be made, as he declines to state his loss.

WM. R. SHAFTER,
Major-General, Commanding.

Personally appeared W. H. Skinner, who, being duly sworn, says he resides in Winnemucca, State of Nevada; that he is employed by the Southern Pacific Railway Company as roundhouse helper; that he was in Klucny's saloon and restaurant (that he boards there) on the evening, after dark, of the 29th day of June, 1899, when a number of colored soldiers crowded into the saloon; that the soldiers were noisy and seemed to be in an ugly mood; that he thought they would make trouble, and, out of apprehension, left the saloon and went away about his duties; that while at work a little later he heard shooting, and that a man was reported shot; that he does not know who did the shooting.

Affiant further states that toward midnight of the same day he again visited Klucny's saloon and noticed that the mirror was broken and that there were fragments of glasses and bottles about the bar.

Further deponent saith not.

Subscribed and sworn to this 7th day of July, 1899, at Winnemucca, Nev.

S. W. GROESBECK,
Judge-Advocate, U. S. Army.

Personally appeared John May, who, being first duly sworn, says his residence is Battle Mountain, State of Nevada; that at present he is living at Winnemucca, in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railway Company as caller; that he was in Klucny's saloon on the evening of the 29th day of June, 1899, when a lot of colored soldiers came into the saloon; that at first these soldiers appeared to be good-natured, but were so noisy and boisterous that he, the affiant, feeling afraid of them, got up to leave the barroom to go into the adjoining room, which is a dining room; that before leaving the room he saw soldiers jump over the bar and take bottles—does not know how many; that he, the affiant, had just passed into the dining room when shots were fired and "Chris Deiss," who was in the barroom, fell into the doorway between the two rooms; that affiant then helped to take care of Deiss, who appeared to be badly hurt, but knows not who hurt him. And affiant further says that about a half hour after the shooting he went through the saloon again; that he saw the broken looking-glass, but did not notice any other damage to property. No property in the dining room was injured. Further deponent saith not.

JOHN MAY.

WINNEMUCCA, NEV., July 7, 1899.

Maj. STEPHEN W. GROESBECK,
Judge-Advocate, U. S. Army.

SIR: In response to your verbal request I herewith submit a statement of the injuries sustained by Christopher Diess, of this place, at the hands of a soldier of the Twenty-fourth or Twenty-fifth Regiment Infantry.

The bullet struck Diess just below the border of the anterior superior spinous process of the ilium. The ball ranged downward, seemingly following the tensor vaginal femoris muscle for several inches, then backward into the gluteal region, coming to within a short distance of the surface.

I removed the ball, which was somewhat flattened, finding it just under the fascia covering the gluteus maximus muscle. It did not penetrate all the tissues covering the ilium, consequently did not strike that bone.

I am inclined to think it did strike the femur, but am not positive. As the leg has been kept perfectly at rest, I am unable to state what, if any, damage was done the femur, but do not think there was any.

Particles of trousers and drawers and two shirts were probably carried into the wound.

Pus is present at the wound of entrance, though to a very limited extent. The temperature was 101.2° at 6 p. m. of the third day, but with that one exception both pulse and temperature have been normal.

The treatment has been purely antiseptic dressing and the patient is, so far as I can see, recovering very nicely.

I have the honor to remain, yours, respectfully,

W. L. SAMUELS, M. D.

[From the Silver State, Winnemucca, Nev., Friday evening, June 30, 1899.]

BULLETS FLY IN THE WINNEMUCCA STREETS—CHRIS. DEISS SHOT DOWN BY A NEGRO SOLDIER—KLUCNY'S SALOON RAIDED BY ARMED ROWDIES—FURNITURE SMASHED AND STOCK STOLEN—EFFORTS MADE TO DISCOVER THOSE MEN WHO FIRED THE SHOTS—AN ANXIOUS COMMANDING OFFICER AND HIS IMPUDENT SUBORDINATES—TRAIN HELD BY THE CIVIL AUTHORITIES—OFFENDERS ESCAPE.

About 8 o'clock last night a special train arrived from the east carrying colored troops. Shortly after its arrival the people uptown were startled by hearing pistol shots, several in succession, accompanied by shouting and yelling. Crowds gathered from all directions and made directly for B. Klucny's restaurant and saloon, where the trouble occurred.

The crowd found Chris. Deiss, who is in the employ of Mr. Klucny, with a dangerous bullet wound in the right side, made by a .38 caliber revolver, a broken mirror behind the bar, and a wrecked saloon.

Two sections of troop trains, running as second and third sections of No. 4, were scheduled to arrive at Winnemucca about 5.30 and 8 p. m., respectively.

The first train carrying soldiers arrived in the neighborhood of 6 o'clock. This section carried colored troops, all members of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, United States Army, General Burt, commanding, being along, with several officers. The soldiers on this train were very orderly.

As soon as the second section, carrying colored troops, stopped at the depot there was a general piling off of black men and a rush made for the neighboring saloons, while the officers repaired to the Lafayette Hotel on Railroad street, where they were served with supper.

Maj. C. H. Noble, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Unitel States Army, was in command, with 340 men, accompanied by Captain Shattuck, commanding Company L, First Lieutenant Hunt, commanding Company M, and Lieutenants Lyon, Enoch, McNally, and Straat, all of the same regiment.

Capt. Archibald A. Cabaniss, of the Twenty-fourth Infantry, was on this section, in command of Company K, composed of 110 men.

He had been ordered to San Francisco, with his command, for duty in the Philippines, from Fort Assinniboine, Mont., which place he left last Sunday. Upon arriving at Spokane, Captain Cabaniss was ordered to San Francisco, via Ogden, on account of the trestle near Grants Pass, on the Oregon and California Railroad, being impassable. He arrived at Ogden in time to join the second section, carrying troops of the Twenty-fifth Infantry from Fort Logan to San Francisco. This command occupied the first two cars and behaved themselves like soldiers.

In the neighborhood of 30 negroes entered Klucny's saloon. They had not been in there over five minutes before it was apparent that trouble was brewing. Several railroad boys were in the saloon when the crowd of soldiers entered. As soon as they saw that the black skins were evidently looking for trouble the railroad men left the building. A few of the negroes drank the liquors called for and paid for them. Rough talking and drinking increased and excitement intensified until one big, burly negro climbed over the bar with his dagger bayonet in one hand and made for Mr. Klucny, who had been attending to the wants of the soldiers. During the mix-up other soldiers stole all the bottled goods they could lay their hands on. One fellow took a half pint flask of whisky, drank it at the end of the bar, and when empty deliberately threw the bottle at the mirror behind the bar, breaking both flask and looking-glass.

The crowd then got out of the saloon, save one, who was helping himself to bottled goods. When he started the soldiers, having remained on the sidewalk in front of the saloon, set up a howl and began shooting right and left. One shot took effect in the partition over the entrance to the restaurant and another in the right side of Chris Deiss. He at that time was standing near the door between the saloon and dining room. In the restaurant a recruit named Frank Weld was buying a lunch from the Chinaman when Deiss fell to the floor, wounded in the side. Weld, seeing Deiss crawling on his hands and knees, went to him and assisted him to the rear room, from whence he was carried to the house in the rear of the saloon.

When the discharging of firearms began, the negroes made for their respective cars helter-skelter.

At that time the officers were eating supper and the soldiers took the occasion to raid the saloon. They had been successful on such an expedition at Carlin, and, evidently having exhausted the supply from that place, thought it about time to make another foraging trip and replenish their haversacks.

At Carlin yesterday afternoon as assembly was being sounded announcing the departure of the train the negro soldiers were in J. Isola's saloon. Upon hearing the bugle call they stampeded and got away with about two dozen flasks of whisky. The proprietor was helpless to do anything and had no time to make complaint to the officers, the train pulling out from the station immediately after the raid.

One of the officers was asked if the men had been orderly since leaving Fort Logan, to which he replied in the affirmative, and when told of the trouble at Carlin he emphatically denied it, saying that he was present in the saloon and knew personally that there was no such an occurrence; but there were two railroad men in Winnemucca last night who had just arrived from the East and were eyewitnesses to the affair, and Mr. Lieutenant was called to time in short order.

If his own statements were correct that he was in the saloon with the negroes at the time, then he must have been a party to the affair, and his actions last night at this place indicated that he would not be beneath such a trick.

News of the shooting spread over the town. Sheriff McDeid, Deputy Sheriff Rose, and Constable Moore were on the scene within a few minutes after the trouble, as was Dr. W. L. Samuels, who attended the wounded man. The bullet entered Deiss's right side, striking the pelvis and ranging downward. It was found about half an inch under the skin in the back and upper portion of the right leg. Doctor Samuels extracted the bullet.

The officers in command of the negroes endeavored to make out that the bullet was not one fired from a Government revolver. Upon examination of the bullet from the discharged cartridge with a Government thirty-eight, no difference was discovered.

Sheriff McDeid notified Major Noble that the train would be held at this point until the man who did the shooting was apprehended. A guard was put on each car and no man allowed to make his exit, while Sheriff McDeid, in company with an officer, went through the train and examined every pistol in possession of a sergeant and musician. The officers claimed that revolvers had been issued to none but sergeants and musicians, and that they had been in possession of such only since last Tuesday, the day they took their departure from Fort Logan.

The only suspicious-looking pistol was a sergeant's from K Company, Twenty-fourth Infantry, but one shot remaining in the revolver. This was in the possession of Sergeant Cook. Upon being examined, it showed that the revolver had not been discharged recently, and the sergeant stated that he had fired the five shots at rabbits when leaving Fort Assinniboine.

After two hours' search through the cars each company was checked up and from appearances found to be all present.

Each company was lined up in single rank and roll called. When each man's name was called, "here" came from some dark spot in the line, indicating that the owner was present, but that was not always true. A reporter was passing up and down the line, and from personal knowledge knows of two instances in Company M where two men responded "here" for two separate names. After roll call, lanterns were brought forward, and Frank Denning, Jack May, John Sterling, and Frank Marchand, who were in the saloon when the soldiers entered, passed down the line inspecting each face, endeavoring to discern the features of some familiar-looking negro, but without any results being obtained.

After Company M, Lieutenant Hunt commanding, had been inspected and "dismissed," the members made a rush for their cars, letting forth an unearthly yell in defiance to the authorities.

The officers made a rush toward the cars, endeavoring to suppress the yelling, but without avail until the colored troops were in the cars.

Four hours of continued search revealed no one with a revolver that had been discharged, and only two men identified as having been in the saloon. One, Sergeant Smith, claimed to have left before the fracas took place, and a private named Porter evidently knew more about it than he wanted to. He became somewhat entangled upon being questioned by District Attorney Van Duzer, making statements that showed conclusively that he was pretty well acquainted with the condition of affairs at the time of the trouble.

Just at the time when all hope of discovering the guilty parties had been given up, Private Frank Weld, a white recruit, who was picked up down the road, he having been left a few days previously by the train pulling out before he could get to it, came forward and stated that he could positively identify the negro who jumped over the bar and stole several bottles of beer. He stated that this negro was a member of Company L, and known to the men of that company as being a very ticklish fellow.

Sheriff McDeid with the recruit and Captain Shattuck passed through the cars which Company L occupied. Many of the men were found to be asleep or playing possum, and Weld was unable to identify his man, but said he could in daylight and would point him out in the morning to his captain.

Then followed a long jangle between Major Noble and Agent S. H. Kitto arrayed on one side and the prosecuting attorney on the other.

Papers were served by the sheriff upon S. H. Kitto, forbidding him to allow the train to leave the station before daylight unless the men who did the shooting and stole the goods were turned over to the civil authorities.

Major Noble said it was an outrage to hold the train any longer, it then being 1.30 in the morning; that he had done everything in his power to help the authorities in the search for the guilty men; that he deprecated the affair, but could not see as anything else could be done. Continuing, he said that holding the train here was delaying the sailing of the transport Pennsylvania, on which his troops were to embark. This was in the nature of a bluff, and the prosecuting attorney remained firm in his determination to hold the train until daylight and have the thief identified by the white recruit.

In the meantime Major Noble telegraphed to Gen. A. S. Burt, who was on the section ahead, that they were being held at Winnemucca on account of "an accident," not divulging to the commanding officer the nature of the trouble.

When the authorities began to settle down to business with a view of accomplishing their object, the military officers positively refused to do anything toward recovering the offenders, and the train was allowed to proceed without any of the guilty parties having been found.

The officers of the companies in the main did what they were asked, but several made considerable of a kick when requested to aid in seeking out the offenders by the major. Captain Shattuck, of Company L, was very gentlemanly and willing to render assistance, but several of the lieutenants took the affair in the nature of a huge joke, doing their work in a don't care manner.

Had either the soldiers who did the shooting or the one who committed the theft been apprehended he would have been punishable under article 58 of the Articles of War. This article provides that in time of war larceny, robbery, arson, murder, assault and battery with an intent to kill, wounding by shooting or stabbing with intent to commit murder, rape, assault and battery, shall be punishable by sentence passed by a general court-martial when committed by persons in the military service of the United States, and punishable in such cases not less than the punishment provided for the like offense by the laws of the State in which such offense may have been committed.

The officers last night stated that traveling under war orders the men were allowed to carry arms under the United States Army Regulations. The blue book, however, explicitly provides that commanding officers shall not give men so armed the privilege to roam about and commit depredations in violation of the State laws.

The affair has not been concluded, although the train has been permitted to leave. The facts will be laid before the Secretary of War, and the officers responsible will no doubt hear from it later.

District Attorney C. D. Van Duzer telegraphed this noon to Major-General Shafter, commanding the Department of the Pacific, with headquarters at San Francisco, notifying him of the affair and charging the officers in charge of the troops with criminal negligence.

Doctor Samuels, the attending surgeon, was seen this noon and questioned as to Deiss's condition. The doctor stated that at noon he was resting very easy, but he had had a terrible night, not sleeping, and attended with much suffering.

It developed this morning that had an inspection been made of every man on the train and his belongings the right soldier who did the shooting would have been located. It is conclusive that a Government revolver was not used, but a pistol of .38 caliber that one of the colored soldiers had stolen from J. Isola's saloon at Carlin.

Conductor Peterson, who brought in No. 3 from the West this afternoon, said that at Wadsworth Major Noble had a guard on at each door of every car and no one but a noncommissioned officer was allowed to get off the train or even as much as to say a word.

Another case of locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

The little taste of military despotism to which Winnemucca was treated last evening does not turn well on the tongue. Although the people of this community live in the Far West and have not the advantage of that refined standard of law and order of the East, which the Easterner affects to believe is denied us, the citizens of Winnemucca are law-abiding. It may be that it is quite the thing in more civilized communities for armed bullies to wreck business houses and shoot down inoffensive citizens, but such exhibitions are as yet unfamiliar to the people of Winnemucca, Humboldt County, and the State of Nevada. Until Nevadans are educated up to what may be quite the proper thing in more civilized communities, the authorities at Washington must tolerate the protest which goes up from this place against such exhibitions of lawlessness as the War Department brought to our doors last night.

The officers in command of the companies are to be blamed for the disturbance. As has been pointed out in The Silver State from time to time, officers stand quietly by while the ruffians of their commands insult women, and, so far as they dare, terrorize men. It has not been a fortnight since Deputy Sheriff Rose was obliged to take charge of a blue-coated scoundrel who grossly insulted a number of ladies who had assembled at the station to take leave of a wedding party which was on its way to California. Such scenes of riot as disgraced the United States Army last night are threatened every time a train load of soldiers passes through this place.

The shooting of Deiss last night was merely an incident. Such shooting may occur any time such ruffianly scoundrels, who appear to hold themselves above the law, may take it into their heads to raid saloon or business house. No doubt had the foul-mouthed fellow whom Sheriff Rose took to task a week ago Sunday been armed, shooting would have ensued. The people, not only of Winnemucca, but of every station along the road, have the right to demand protection from such rowdyism. If the War Department is unwilling or unable to protect the people from the insults and murderous assaults of the soldiers, there are ways by which women and children can be protected and property preserved. No man is worthy of the name who will stand quietly by and see his wife and daughter insulted by a ruffian, whether he be in uniform or out.

Something must be radically wrong when the citizens of this Republic are terrorized by the soldiers whose only excuse for being is that they preserve the peace and quiet of the nation.

Secretary of War.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 17, 1899.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication of 16th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, repeating telegram from Capt. W. J. Nicholson, United States Army, acting Indian agent, San Carlos Agency, Ariz., relative to a murderous assault made by twelve or fifteen soldiers upon four peaceful Indians belonging to said agency, and also copy of telegram from Captain Nicholson, dated 16th instant, addressed to the Department on the same subject.

Captain Nicholson reports very bad feeling between soldiers and Indians and states that negro soldiers should not remain at the agency, and that if this company is not immediately removed he fears serious trouble.

In view of the statements made by Captain Nicholson, I have the honor to suggest the advisability of removing this company from the San Carlos Reservation without delay.

Very respectfully,

THOS. RYAN,
Acting Secretary.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, October 16, 1899.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: This office has the honor to repeat herewith a telegram, dated the 14th instant, received from Capt. W. J. Nicholson, United States Army, acting Indian agent, San Carlos Agency, Ariz., which reads as follows:

"Last night twelve to fifteen soldiers made murderous attack upon four peaceful Indians without provocation, beating them to insensibility with clubs. Very bad feeling between soldiers and Indians. If this company is not immediately removed, fear serious trouble. Doing all in my power to punish guilty parties."

The office has no information concerning this affair other than the telegram above quoted, from which it would seem that the prompt removal of the company to which the offenders belong from San Carlos is desired by the acting agent, in order to prevent serious trouble. It is therefore respectfully recommended that a copy of this letter be transmitted to the War Department, with request that such action be taken as may be deemed necessary in the premises, to the end that the threatened trouble may be averted and the guilty parties punished.

A copy of this report is inclosed herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. TONNER, Acting Commissioner.

SAN CARLOS, ARIZ., October 16, 1899.
(Via Holbrook, October 17.)

Hon. SECRETARY OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C.:

Saturday night ten or twelve negro soldiers made a murderous assault on four sleeping Indians, beating them to insensibility with clubs. Made one arrest so far. Hope to make others. Have every confidence in me. Negro soldiers should not remain here. All quiet.

NICHOLSON, Agent.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, October 17, 1899.

COMMANDING GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF THE COLORADO,
Denver:

Upon telegram from acting Indian agent, San Carlos, of very bad feeling between soldiers and Indians, and that if negro soldiers are not removed he fears serious trouble, Interior Department has suggested the advisability of removing this company from the San Carlos Reservation without delay. Secretary War approves and Major-General Commanding suggests that D, Seventh Infantry, be sent from Fort Crook to replace C, Twenty-fifth, which might join home battalion in Texas. Secretary War would like your views at once.

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

[Telegram.]

DENVER, COLO., October 17, 1899.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Already prepared to remove colored infantry from San Carlos. Troop Ninth Cavalry en route now for purpose. Perhaps white men less likely to provoke trouble. Company Seventh Infantry from Crook and Roots could go San Carlos, and infantry from San Carlos take station at Roots and Mackenzie. Should have at least two experienced officers for that plan. Preferably put whole company at Roots and leave Mackenzie in charge quartermaster's agent for winter. Cavalry troops to remain at San Carlos till white company arrives. See also my telegram yesterday regarding Roots and Mackenzie.

MERRIAM, Brigadier-General.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., October 18, 1899.

The Major-General Commanding recommends as follows:

Company D, Seventh Infantry, Fort Crook, to be ordered to San Carlos, Ariz. The company of the Twenty-fifth Infantry now at San Carlos to be ordered to Texas, reporting by telegraph to the department commander for assignment to a station. The commanding general Department of the Missouri to send one company of the First Infantry from Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to Fort Logan H. Roots, Ark., for station, and one company of the Tenth Infantry from Fort Crook, Ariz., to Fort Mackenzie, Wyo., for station.

J. C. GILMORE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Second indorsement.]

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, October 20, 1899.

Respectfully returned to the Major-General Commanding the Army to know if, in consideration of the accompanying telegram of the 19th from General Merriam, he will recommend any change from the instructions given in preceding indorsement of October 18.

JOHN A. JOHNSTON,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Third indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,

FORT GRANT, ARIZ. TER.,
October 23, 1899.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
DEPARTMENT OF THE COLORADO,
Denver, Colo.

SIR: In obedience to telegraphic instructions from your headquarters of the 15th instant, ordering me to proceed to San Carlos and investigate disturbance between soldiers and Indians at that post, I left Fort Grant on the morning of the 16th, and arrived at Fort Thomas that afternoon and San Carlos the following day about 1 p. m., and immediately proceeded to make the investigation ordered, and have the honor to report as follows:

On Friday, October 13, 13 men of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, after dark visited a small isolated camp toward the river from the post, and tried to get the Indians to come outside, which they declined to do, and the soldiers left and went across to the other side of the post to a small camp of Tontos. At this camp there were two Indians outside the tepees, one laying down and one Indian police talking to him. The soldiers immediately struck the policeman on the head with a club, also the Indian lying on the ground. Two Indians came running out of the tepees, and they were also struck with clubs. One of the soldiers secured the policeman's pistol.

The squaws in camp aroused the neighboring Indians and the police force, and the soldiers then dropped their clubs and ran toward the post, closely followed by a number of Indians.

About the time they arrived some person shouted fire, and fire call was sounded, so that when the officers arrived on the scene all of the company were out of their quarters and no arrests were made that night.

The Indians who followed the men returned to their camps on being assured by their agent that everything would be done to bring the guilty parties to justice.

The next day the commanding officer confined four men, but discovered later they were not the right ones. The Indians told their agent that the soldiers were led by a white man of the Hospital Corps, and when the man of the Hospital Corps and some light-colored soldiers were assembled in the office three Indians separately went in and picked out Private Morehead, Hospital Corps, and Private Welcome, Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, as members of the assaulting party.

Next day Private Briggs was confined, but denied being with the party, but afterwards acknowledged that he was one of them and gave the names of five other men who were present, and said there were others whose names he did not know, but that he knew the men by sight. I had the company assembled, and Private Briggs pointed out Privates Cuthbert, Owens, Trader, and Washington as being of the party that night. As the guardhouse is only a shack, and the prisoners were all huddled together, and I could get no information from them, I had two of them, Musician Savoy and Private Higgins, whom I suspected of being the ringleaders, taken over to the Indian guardhouse and placed in separate cells.

The next day these two men were willing to tell what they knew of the affair, and I had their affidavits taken, which are inclosed and marked A and B. From these affidavits and that of Private Briggs, also inclosed, it will be seen that they all name the same men, and I am satisfied these and no others constituted the party.

Private Young also acknowledged to the commanding officer and myself that he was present and named the same parties, but each and every one emphatically denied that Private Morehead, of the Hospital Corps, was with them or that they saw him on the night in question, which shows that no reliance can be placed on the testimony of the Indians.

The deputy United States marshal went to Globe on Thursday, the 19th instant, and returned with warrants for the thirteen men mentioned in the affidavits on Friday, the 20th instant, when they were turned over to him, and he left with them for Globe that afternoon.

It seems that for some time past men of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, have been in the habit of visiting some of the Indian camps and making improper proposals to squaws, of which the Indians complained, and orders were given for the men to keep away, and the Indian police were given orders to arrest any men found in their camps. Two men were arrested some time ago and were tried by summary court, and I have no doubt this raid was deliberately planned to get revenge on some of the police.

When I visited the Indians, the day after my arrival at San Carlos, they had gone to their respective work and expressed themselves as perfectly satisfied that everything was being done to bring the guilty parties to justice.

With the exception of neglecting to inform the commanding officer of Fort Grant of the trouble, which might have been a serious matter if an outbreak had taken place, the commanding officer of San Carlos seems to have handled the affair very satisfactorily.

I left San Carlos on the 21st and arrived at this post on the 22d instant.

Very respectfully,

THOS. MCGREGOR,
Colonel Ninth Cavalry.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE COLORADO,
Denver, Colo., October 30, 1899.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army for information of the honorable Secretary of War.

The prompt and efficient action of Colonel McGregor, under instructions from these headquarters, appears to have allayed all cause of complaint and all danger of further disorder.

In view of the results, I regret the transfer of the offending company to a choice station at this time.

I hope action may be taken on my letter dated October 12, 1899, asking what shall be the official relation between San Carlos and Fort Grant.

H. C. MERRIAM,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., November 12, 1899.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
War Department, Washington, D. C.:

Report arrival of Company C, Twenty-fifth Infantry, 100 enlisted men, Capt. C. L. Hodges, First Lieut. G. D. Arrowsmith, 8 p. m., November 11.

HODGES, Commanding.

AFFAIR AT EL PASO, TEX., FEBRUARY 16–17, 1900.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, February 21, 1900.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to furnish herewith, for the information of the Department, the following report received from the commanding officer, Fort Bliss, Tex., on the recent disturbance at El Paso, Tex.

FORT BLISS, TEX., February 19, 1900.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, Tex.

SIR: I have the honor to report that sometime during the night of 16th to 17th instant a number of men of Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, took rifles from the arms racks and went to the city jail of El Paso, Tex., where two soldiers were held for trial by the city authorities on charge of drunk and disorderly, fired into the city jail, killing one policeman on duty there. Corpl. James W. Hull, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was killed. The noncommissioned officer in charge of barracks permitted the keys of the arms racks to get out of his possession. It is believed now that he was one of the party.

As soon as I learned of the outrage (7 o'clock the 17th) the whereabouts of every man was ascertained, the arms and all ammunition were secured and placed under lock and key, and every precaution taken to prevent any soldier leaving the limits of the post.

It is needless to say that I am doing everything in my power to find the guilty parties. Believe I have the leader.

The civil authorities, both city and county, have been very courteous and considerate, and have accepted my assurances that I will do all in my power to bring the guilty parties to justice. I will report by wire whenever necessary.

Very respectfully,
R. H. R. LOUGHBOROUGH,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Commanding.

Very respectfully,
CHAMBERS MCKIBBEN,
Colonel Twelfth Infantry, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, March 1, 1900.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I forward herewith report of the investigation of the recent troubles at El Paso, Tex., made by Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts, acting adjutant-general of the department, to which attention is respectfully invited.

There seems to have been no indications from which any disorder of the kind could have been anticipated and certainly no excuse for the assault on the jail which resulted so unfortunately, and it is also probable that the parties connected with it had no intention of adding murder to the crime of assault.

The incident, however, shows that at all posts in this department garrisoned by single companies of colored soldiers similar disturbances are liable to occur without warning, due to fancied wrongs and the effort to take matters into their own hands. In the present instance there can be no possible excuse offered, and it can not even be suggested that the arrest of Corporal Dyson was not warranted.

The incident also emphasizes the need for a full complement of officers at all one (1) company posts. One officer can not alone properly and efficiently administer the affairs at these posts and at the same time pay the attention to the instruction and discipline of their companies, consisting so largely of recruits, with noncommissioned officers of comparatively short service and insufficient experience, which is absolutely necessary.

Captain Loughborough is an officer of great experience, and one of the most conscientious and efficient officers in the Army, but the nature and scope of his duties prevent his being so closely in touch with his men as is essential to best results with this class of troops, which, unquestionably, requires stricter discipline and more constant oversight than white troops. This is largely due to the fact that since the increase in size of the companies recruits have been largely drawn from sections where colored men have less independence of character and freedom from control, and less care has been taken in their selection.

There is, unquestionably, a very strong prejudice throughout all the old slave States against colored troops, and this is quite a separate feeling from the ordinary race prejudice which is, perhaps, less at El Paso than at other border towns in this department. A colored man in uniform represents authority, and this idea suggests superiority, which is bitterly resented. It is not because the colored soldier is disorderly—for, as the rule, they behave better than white soldiers, and, even when drunk, are less troublesome to manage—but because they are soldiers.

Regiments of colored troops have been organized in accordance with acts of Congress and are part of the military establishment, and it can not be expected that the Government of the United States shall accept dictation in deciding upon the use to be made of them or their stations.

In this connection I desire to call attention to the statement in Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts's report with reference to the published article in an El Paso newspaper giving an alleged interview with Hon. Moses Dillon, United States collector of customs. This is not the only occasion which has come to my knowledge in which expressions of this kind have been indulged in by Federal officials. While it is impossible to protect colored soldiers from insults from the hoodlum class or from unjust discrimination in border towns where the right of drunken cowboys and other white men to "shoot up the town" upon occasions is tacitly recognized, it is submitted that the Government is entitled to expect that the utterances of Federal officials should tend to allay, rather than to intensify, local excitement and prejudice, and especially when they are, presumably, politically in sympathy with the present Administration.

It is to be regretted that it is impossible to fix responsibility more definitely upon the participants, but it is believed that the investigation which is being conducted will eventually disclose all the guilty parties.

The precautions taken by Captain Loughborough to prevent further disturbance seem to be all that are possible.

Very respectfully,
CHAMBERS MCKIBBIN,
Colonel Twelfth Infantry, Commanding.

[Inclosure.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, February 28, 1900.

The. ADJUTANT-GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS.

SIR: In compliance with the instructions of the department commander, I have to report that I proceeded on the 20th instant to Fort Bliss, Tex., to investigate the recent troubles at that post, returning yesterday.

I have to report as follows:

That during the night of February 16–17 Sergt. John Kipper, Corpl. Samuel E. Dyson, and Privates Davis and Wright, all of Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, were on pass in the city of El Paso. It appears that Corporal Dyson became more or less intoxicated, and about 1.30 a. m., February 17, was arrested by the police and confined in the city jail. Sergeant Kipper, with Privates Davis and Wright, went to the jail and endeavored to obtain Dyson's release by giving bail or paying a fine, but were informed it was too late, that the official who had authority to accept bail had gone home, and that the man could not be released before morning.

Sergeant Kipper and party then left the jail, and, it is presumed, returned to the post. At about 2.30 a. m. he was seen riding into the post on a bicycle by the sentry on the road leading to El Paso. At about 3 a. m. Private Harris says Sergeant Kipper came into his squad room, went to his bunk, awakened him, and told him to come with him and get Corporal Dyson out of jail. He also at the same time pulled the blanket from over Private Coffey's face and lighted a match. Private Coffey recognized Sergeant Kipper, who did not speak, but went to Harris's bunk. Coffey heard Kipper ask Harris to go with him to get Dyson out of jail, and Harris's reply, "I am sick and won't go with you."

The noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters was Corpl. Gardner Davis, who says that after taking check roll call at 11 p. m. he went to bed and had the keys of the gun racks under his head; that some time in the night they were removed without disturbing him. It appears that two arm racks were unlocked and eight rifles taken out; also that two of the fire axes from the rack outside the company quarters were taken.

The night force on duty at the city jail consisted of a mounted policeman named Newton Stewart, and the jailer, "Dick" Blacker, who says that about 5 o'clock a. m. he was awakened by shots, and that he saw one man in the door of his room, who fired at him; that he returned the fire and then jumped out of the window. He saw only the one man and can not recognize him—indeed, was so much frightened that it is doubtful if he saw anyone or not. A number of men from the engine room next door, alarmed by the firing, rushed in and found the policeman, Stewart, unconscious. He died about 7 a. m. without regaining consciousness. The firemen followed a trail of blood leading from the police station about 150 yards and found the dead body of Corpl. James H. Hall, with his rifle by his side. The keys of the arm racks which had been opened were found in his pockets.

So far as can be learned, the only person other than the jailer, Blacker, who saw anything of the party was a man named Stoltz, who says that about 5 a. m. he saw a party of about ten or twelve soldiers; that though he did not observe them closely, he noticed that each had a rifle and one had an axe, and that they turned down the street toward the jail. He heard no words. He was on his bicycle hurrying to his work at Nation's meat market, and can not identify any of them.

The following-named men, against whom circumstances point most strongly, were on the 22d instant turned over to the civil authorities, and are now confined in the county jail at El Pas [sic], viz, Sergt. John Kipper, Corpl. William Powell, and Private Leroy Roberts. The circumstances which indicate the complicity of these men are as follows: Sergt John Kipper, in addition to circumstances narrated above, was seen by members of the Hospital Corps just before reveille on the morning in question, in company with another man, in the chaparral in the act of pulling off a pair of canvas trousers, and, shortly afterwards, the musician of the guard saw Private Leroy Roberts coming into the garrison from the east side, followed a few minutes later by Sergeant Kipper. A canvas suit with Sergeant Kipper's name inside the trousers was found concealed in a tile pipe in rear of the bakery. In one of the squad rooms of the vacant barracks two rifles and two suits of canvas clothing were found and Corporal Powell's name was on one of the coats.

In addition to the three rifles above, one was found in the chaparral near the hospital, one was brought in by a civilian, and one was found a short distance from the city jail, making six in all, leaving two missing.

In addition to the three men turned over to the civil authorities, the following are held in confinement at the post under suspicion: Corpl. Gardner Davis, who was noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters on the night in question; Privates Davis and Wright, who visited the jail with Sergeant Kipper, and Private Elmore Sears. There are also two or three others under surveillance as suspects, though there is so far nothing tangible connecting them with the occurrence.

On the morning of July 23 Corporal McElroy, noncommissioned officer of the guard, deserted after posting the 7 a. m. relief, taking his arms and equipment, which were shortly afterwards found near the post. This man had been suspected, but as there was no implicating evidence against him he had not been arrested.

The above is practically all that has been discovered with reference to the affair up to this time. The information is far from satisfactory, but it is believed within a few days other circumstances will be discovered which will weave a mesh of evidence around the guilty parties.

I remained at Fort Bliss until the afternoon of the 23d. I made no independent investigations, believing it better not to interfere with Captain Loughborough and the civil authorities, who are working in thorough harmony. I had interviews with the mayor of the city, the sheriff of the county, the district attorney, and many prominent citizens. All spoke in high praise of Captain Loughborough, and all expressed perfect confidence in his discretion and good faith.

I was assured by all that there was absolutely no danger of lynch violence, of which I felt some anxiety on account of the excited condition of the community.

The grand jury which will investigate the case meets in April, by which time the matter can be examined into more temperately. The district attorney assured me that an absolutely fair trial shall be had and that no conviction shall be found without adequate and unquestioned evidence of guilt.

As the matter stands at present, although circumstances strongly connect Sergeant Kipper with the crime, in the cases of the other men it is weaker, and in none of the cases is there evidence which, in my judgment, would justify conviction. It will probably be necessary to use one or more of the participants as witnesses for the State.

It appears proper in this report to call attention to the existence at El Paso, as well as in all border towns in the State, of a feeling of hostility, or prejudice, to say the least, against colored men in uniform. I doubt if this obtains, at least in El Paso, to the same extent as at Laredo and Rio Grande City, as a race prejudice, as negroes are largely employed as servants or laborers, but against colored men as soldiers the feeling is, perhaps, even stronger. Soldiers from the post are arrested for infractions of police regulations, or when intoxicated, or in the least degree noisy or disorderly, when white men committing the same offenses are not interfered with. It is an unpleasant subject to mention, but it is unquestionably true, that a negro soldier in uniform is frequently subjected to insult, though behaving with perfect propriety, for no other reason than his color. It is impossible to ignore this fact, and so long as colored soldiers are stationed in these border towns there will be troubles of one kind or another, which no care or vigilance on the part of officers can prevent.

The discipline at Fort Bliss may be classed as excellent. Captain Loughborough is an exceedingly conscientious and efficient officer, and yet this trouble occurred and will perhaps occur again when least expected at some other point, and human foresight can not guard against it.

Since the occurrences of the morning of the 17th instant, I am pleased to be able to say that the reports in the newspapers at El Paso on the troubles, and the editorial comments thereon, have been studiously conservative, and their tendency has been to allay and quiet excitement. Really the most radical published statement I have been able to find is by the United States collector of customs at El Paso, as follows: "We must get those negroes out of here; they are simply breeders of trouble. The negro is the same wherever you find him. Put him into uniform and he thinks he can run things to suit himself."

As bearing on the conduct of the men of Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, since Captain Loughborough has been in command of Fort Bliss, June 11, 1899, a period of more than eight months, the records show that thirteen different men have been arrested by the police in the city of El Paso; ninety-four men of the company have never been arrested. When it is considered that over fifty of the men of longest service in company have been drafted for service in the Philippines, and more than fifty have less than one year's service, I think it may be said that the record of the company is excellent and, under the conditions obtaining, more than creditable.

The precautions taken to prevent further trouble seem to be all that are possible. All arms are securely locked in arm racks; all ammunition has been taken from the men and locked up in company storerooms, and all the keys kept in the personal possession of the company commander. Only ten cartridges are issued to the guard, five to sentinels and five to noncommissioned officer on duty, turned over each morning by the commanding officer. On an average four check rolls are had each night between call to quarters and reveille.

In closing this report I deem it my duty to urge that every effort be made to obtain for all companies of colored troops at least two officers. In the department there are five posts garrisoned by a single company each, and at each post there is but a single officer, who, besides his duties as commanding officer, must perform all the duties of the different staff departments. When it is considered that all the companies are full, over 100 men each, composed largely of recruits, and many of them selected with less than usual care, it must be evident that, even with the most conscientious and careful attention, it is impossible to maintain the constant oversight necessary to insure best results.

Very respectfully,

C. S. ROBERTS,
Lieutenant-Colonel Thirteenth Infantry.

FORT BLISS, TEX., March 2, 1900.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS,
San Antonio, Tex.

SIR: I have the honor to report that between 4 and 5 o'clock on the morning of February 17, 1900, a party of nine enlisted men of Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, with rifles and axes, made an attack on the city jail of El Paso, Tex., where two soldiers of that company were confined on charge of drunk and disorderly. Corporal James W. Hull, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was killed; also one of the city police on duty at the jail.

The first information I had of this was when two police officers arrived at the post about 7.30 a. m.; but they could not give any information of the affair further than a party of soldiers with army rifles had fired into the jail some time that morning, that army guns were used, as they had two which had been left by some of the party in their hasty flight. Corporal Hull and Private William H. Davis were absent from reveille. The latter reported about ten minutes after it. Immediately all arms and ammunition were placed under lock and key and every precaution taken to prevent any soldier leaving the post. Investigation was instituted at once to find the guilty men. The company arms racks were examined. Two were opened, and eight rifles were missing. Corpl. Gardner Davis, the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters, was questioned, and stated that the keys of the racks had been taken from under his pillow during the night while he was asleep. Subsequently he stated that they were taken from the pocket of his trousers, which were on a chair by the side of his bunk.

The men on the pass list were examined. Sergeant Kipper, when questioned, stated that he had been in El Paso until about half past 1 o'clock that morning, when he returned to the post with Privates Wright and Davis. Private Wright stated that he was in the city until about half past 1 o'clock with Sergeant Kipper, Corporal Dyson, and Private Davis, and that they were just leaving town when Corporal Dyson was arrested by the city police and taken to jail; that he came on to the post, passing the sentinel at the foot of the hill about 3 o'clock. The sentinel stated that Sergeant Kipper passed about 2.30 a. m., going into the post, riding a bicycle, and that Wright passed about half an hour later, and that he did not see them after that. During the day there were rumors that certain men had been seen coming into the post just before reveille, in brown canvas uniform, and that Sergeant Kipper and Private Roberts were seen taking off their brown canvas clothing just outside the post. Both were immediately arrested. Two days later Corporal Powell's name was discovered on the inside of the sleeve of one of the two canvas suits, with two rifles, found in the vacant barracks, and he was arrested.

Sergeant Kipper, Corporal Powell, and Private Roberts were turned over to the civil authorities on the 22d ultimo.

At 7 o'clock a. m. February 23, Corpl. George O. McElroy left the guardhouse to post the relief at the foot of the hill and has not been seen here since. The sentinel says that after the corporal posted him he started up the hill toward the post, saying, "I am going by the hospital to get some medicine," and that he did not see him again. McElroy's rifle, belt, and gloves were found that day a short distance from the sentinel's post.

Information necessary to proceed with the investigation was very meager, though every clue was followed. There was nothing but circumstantial evidence, and in some cases this was not entirely convincing. Several suspects were arrested, but afterwards released for lack of tangible evidence except two, who subsequently proved to be the right men.

On the evening of February 28 Private James W. Durand, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry (who had previously given me some valuable information), told me that he knew Corporal Powell very well; that he was sure he was guilty, but if he could be promised protection he believed he would tell all he knew, and if I desired he would write to him and advise him to do so. I communicated with the sheriff (Corporal Powell being in his custody), who came out next morning and approved the plan. Durand wrote the letter, gave it to me to read, and I gave it to the sheriff, who started at once for El Paso, returning in the afternoon with a sealed note from Corporal Powell giving the names of the men in the party and a message from Powell that if I would come to the jail he would tell me all. I went immediately to the county jail in El Paso, and, in company with the sheriff, to the cell where Corporal Powell was confined.

The sheriff then warned Corporal Powell that any statement he might make must be voluntary, and that it could be used as evidence for or against him; that if he told the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, he would be protected. Corporal Powell then said he would tell everything he knew; that he would not add anything nor leave out anything. He then related the following story: "About 3 o'clock on the morning of February 17, 1900, Sergt. John Kipper came to my bunk in the company quarters and woke me up and said: 'Corporal Dysen is in jail, and I want you to come and go with me to get him out. The gun rack is unlocked, and you get a gun.' At the same time he woke up Corporal McElroy and told him the same thing. McElroy and myself got up and dressed, putting on our canvas uniform over the blue one, went downstairs to the back porch of the barracks, and there found Sergeant Kipper, Corporal Hull, Privates Roberts, Elazer, Carroll, Wright, and Davis. All had rifles, and McElroy and Elazer each carried an ax besides his gun. Sergeant Kipper was directing the whole thing.

"We then started for town, going in rear of the mess hall and vacant barracks, watching all the time to avoid being seen by the sentinel; passed in front of the hospital and kept to the left to avoid being seen by the sentinel at the foot of the hill, and struck the main road this side of the powder houses, keeping on it until near town, when we saw a buggy coming down the road. Eight of us then moved to the right in the bushes, and Sergeant Kipper went alone to the left of the road. We met again on Myrtle avenue, just at the edge of town, and went straight to the jail. When we got near there Sergeant Kipper told each man what to do. Corporal Hull, Corporal McElroy, and Carroll rushed for the jail door, which was opened, and Corporal Hull called out: 'Give up those prisoners!' Two shots were fired right away, and Corporal Hull ran out leaning forward, and I saw he was hit. Other shots were fired immediately after. Corporal Hull was shot by the man just inside the door, and I think Hull shot him. If Hull did not kill him, McElroy or Carroll did. The first two shots were so close together that I could not tell which fired first. That was my gun and Carroll's found in the vacant barracks. We all ran and came back to the post. Sergeant Kipper had the keys of the gun racks and gave them to Corporal Hull on the way into town. I asked Sergeant Kipper how he got the keys of the gun racks, and he said: 'Out of Corporal Davis's pocket.'"

Corporal Powell's story is borne out by circumstances, and, I believe, is correct in every detail.

The following are the names of the men he gives as being in the party, viz:

Sergt. John Kipper, Corpl. George O. McElroy, Private Leroy Roberts, Private William H. Davis, Private Boyer Wright, Corpl. James W. Hull, Corpl. William Powell, Private Benjamin F. Carroll, and Private Joel Elazer.

All of the above have been turned over to the civil authorities, except Corporal McElroy, deserted, and Hull, deceased.

Corporal Powell declares that he has given the name of every one in the party or that, to his knowledge, knows anything about it.

As stated, eight rifles were missing from the arms racks when inventory was taken on the morning of the 17th; since I have found that Sergeant Kipper returned the rifle he had to the barracks just before reveille, hiding it between the mattress and springs of one of the bunks.

In conclusion, I beg to say that I am very much indebted to Mr. James H. Boone, the sheriff of El Paso County, for his courtesy and patience throughout the investigation, and especially for many suggestions which proved of great assistance. Mr. Boone is an old and capable officer.

I beg also to give the names of enlisted men of this command who have been loyal and faithful, voluntarily coming to me with information, without which it would have been much more difficult, if not impossible, to have apprehended the guilty. They are—

Post Q. M. Sergt. James L. Douglass, U. S. Army.
First Sergt. George Williams, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Sergt. Hill Conwell, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Sergt. David Jordan, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Sergt. Tolbert Parks, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Corpl. James H. Pergan, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Corpl. Washington C. Holly, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Corpl. James Beckwith, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Corpl. Abram Martin, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Cook Button Mitchell, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.
Private James W. Durand, Company A, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

All the above soldiers have to their credit from eight to nearly thirty years of service.

Very respectfully,

R. H. R. LOUGHBOROUGH,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Commanding.

AFFAIR NEAR FORT NIOBRARA, NEBR., OCTOBER 29–30, 1904.

[On October 29–30, 1904, the garrison of Fort Niobrara, Nebr., consisted of Company K, Eleventh Infantry, and Companies A, B, C, D, I, K, L, and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

The hospital records of the post show that Private Isaiah Raynor, Company B, Twenty-fifth Infantry, was admitted October 30, 1904, with a contused and lacerated wound received in a brawl at a house of ill fame near Fort Niobrara, Nebr., October 29, 1904, and that Lulu Johnson, civilian (colored), was admitted November 1, 1904, with gunshot wound "received at the hands of some party or parties unknown at a house of ill repute near Fort Niobrara, Nebr., October 31, 1904;" died November 3, 1904; also, that Raymond J. Smith, civilian (Indian), was admitted November 1, 1904, with gunshot wound received at the hands of some party or parties unknown at a house of ill repute near Fort Niobrara, Nebr., October 31, 1904. Left hospital January 20, 1905. The only additional data bearing on the subject that have been found on the files of the War Department follow.—M. S. O.]

FORT NIOBRARA, NEBR.,
October 30, 1904.

The ADJUTANT, Fort Niobrara, Nebr.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that about 12.30 o'clock this morning I heard several shots fired, the sound coming from the direction of Stratton's ranch.

I was at this time on duty as officer of the day, and a few minutes later the sergeant of the guard reported to me that a man of the hospital corps wanted an order to get the ambulance out of the corral. I sent this order over, and then a little later sent an order to the sergeant of the guard to put on a patrol near the chapel with orders to arrest and turn over to the corporal of the guard all enlisted men approaching his post.

Later I learned that it was thought the shooting was done with the service rifles. This was about 2.30 a. m. I then ordered a check to be taken in each organization of both men and rifles, and all (men and rifles) were reported "present or accounted for" except two men of the band and one private of Company K, Eleventh Infantry, who were reported absent.

At the regular 11 o'clock p. m. inspection there was one noncommissioned officer, Company K, Eleventh Infantry, and one private, Company M, Twenty-fifth Infantry, absent.

I inspected the barracks at 2.30 a. m. and found all gun racks locked, and the noncommissioned officers all reported they had been locked immediately after supper.

Very respectfully,

NED. M. GREEN,
First Lieutenant, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

SURGEON'S OFFICE, POST HOSPITAL,
Fort Niobrara, Nebr., October 31, 1904.

The ADJUTANT,
Fort Niobrara, Nebr.

SIR: I have the honor to request authority to admit to this hospital for treatment two civilian patients, a man and a woman, who were seriously wounded Saturday evening, October 29, 1904, and who require hospital treatment, without which their chances for recovery will be very small.

It is respectfully requested that this office be informed as soon as practicable of the decision of the commanding officer in the matter.

Very respectfully,

R. S. PORTER,
Captain and Assistant Surgeon, U. S. Army, Surgeon.

Captain and Adjutant, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Adjutant.

[From New York Tribune of December 4, 1906.]

THE TWENTY-FIFTH AT FORT NIOBRARA—CONDUCT OF THE NEGRO SOLDIERS WHEN STATIONED IN NEBRASKA.

To the EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE.

SIR: Could the persons, even the negro ministers and others, who are holding mass meetings denouncing President Roosevelt's action in dismissing from the service the entire enlisted strength of the three companies of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry which were stationed at Fort Brown on the night that Brownsville, Tex., was "shot up" have had the opportunity of knowing those troops better, the chances are they would not be so severe in their criticism of the President's action.

Two battalions (eight companies) of that regiment came to Fort Niobrara for station directly from the Philippines in 1902. They remained at that post continually until its abandonment, in July last, when, in leaving, they were assigned to stations in Texas. Valentine, 4½ miles distant, is the railway station where all the post's business was transacted, and, having a population of about 1,200, it sustained very much the same relation to Fort Niobrara as Brownsville does to Fort Brown, Tex. Consequently they were in and out of town constantly, singly or in numbers, trading, loafing, or attending errands, and it is said by our citizens, rightly, that they were well behaved, and no citizen not looking for it had the least excuse for getting into trouble with any one of them.

However, among themselves and with their camp followers, principally discharged soldiers from the negro regiment, a part at least were terrors and in their brawls seemed to place no more value upon a human life than though the taking of the same were a mere incident in their purpose of destruction. In the dance halls and resorts, which followed them into the country and went out of business and left immediately on the departure of the troops, they would fight like demons, and the records of our district court have been loaded down with criminal cases due to these fights, with a goodly number of participants in the State penitentiary, to say nothing of the number punished by military courts-martial. Bearing particularly on the phase which brought about the wholesale dismissal a somewhat similar case might be recited:

A discharged soldier from one of the negro regiments named Stratton kept a rooming and dance house on a tract of land about 1½ miles from Fort Niobrara. On the night of October 29, 1904, about midnight, while the usual dance was in progress, a team hauling a spring wagon, with four occupants, drove up in front of the door, and one of the inmates, called Lulu Johnson, came out of the house to the wagon. Immediately shots rang out, apparently fired at the wagon, but from a point that each must take effect there or pass into, and in some instances through, the dance hall, which was very well filled with dancers.

When the firing ceased it was found that Turnbull, the driver, was shot through the arm; Raymond Smith, an occupant, through the body; Lulu Johnson, through the breast, near the heart; one horse killed, and the other wounded. Inside the building a stove had been hit and shattered, the bar shot up somewhat, but miraculously no person hurt, although there were any number of close calls. Coincidentally, two men in khaki were seen, with guns across their shoulders, starting toward Fort Niobrara. Next morning sixteen empty Krag-Jörgensen shells were found on the ground at the point where the firing seemed to come from and the location the two men were seen leaving. The wounded were taken to the Fort Niobrara hospital, where the Johnson woman died the next day; Turnbull recovered promptly, and Smith finally.

The shooting, having been committed off the reservation, came under the jurisdiction of the civil authorities. Consequently the sheriff and coroner were notified, a coroner's jury was empaneled, and a post-mortem held at post hospital, which resulted in determining that from the character of the wound it was made by a Krag-Jörgensen. The murder appearing so wanton and cold blooded, extraordinary efforts were put forth to try to locate the guilty ones. Persons who were thought by their associations to be on terms of intimacy with the soldiers were looked to to secure the information, and Colonel Hoyt, commanding the regiment, assigned Lieutenants Mapes and Wiegenstein for special duty to run down the guilty ones, if possible.

The officers, in fact, were particularly anxious to apprehend and deliver the culprits to the civil authorities. However, although that shooting was done on a clear, bright night by two persons seen in the act or immediately thereafter, not the slightest trace has to this day been discovered in the direction of either apprehending the guilty parties or of learning the motive. It was said that although numbers of the enlisted men might have full knowledge of men and motive, no one would dare to divulge the same for fear of his own life.

Although the murdered one was one of their own color and without character, the act was no less a crime than the like one which followed it in Brownsville, and only emphasizes the necessity of some form of salutary punishment. While the soldiers might justify silence in the latter case on account of fear lest a fair trial could not be had in Texas, no such excuse could prevail here, since the murdered one was not a citizen of this community, but a woman of their own race in whom no one would have any special interest, and the trial could have been purely on its merits without prejudice against the prisoners. Yet those who possessed the necessary information were as silent in the former as in the latter instance.

No question but that a very large majority of those soldiers discountenance such acts, judged by what was seen of them during four years here, but there are tough characters in each company ready at all times to do acts of violence, whom the better men do not appear to endeavor to get rid of, and who are responsible for the condition in which the men of those three companies find themselves now. It is another case of "poor dog Tray."

Threats were heard that this town might be "shot up" some night, but the treatment of these soldiers by our citizens was such that we did not believe the cooler heads would ever permit it to be possible.

It may be said that soldiers should not be allowed their rifles excepting when on actual duty. That is suposed to be the case, yet at times they find a way of getting a part of them at least. However, is a man worthy to be a soldier who can not be trusted with a gun excepting when in ranks for fear lest a whole community be "shot up?"

This communication is written with the one purpose, however, of endeavoring to influence those negro pastors and people and the sympathizers of all races to investigate at little closer range, with the hope that they will modify their resolutions and memorials directed against an honest and courageous President.

C. H. CORNELL,
Chairman Republican Congressional Committee,

VALENTINE, NEBR., November 30, 1906.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 11, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The President directs me to refer to you the inclosed letter from Mr. Seth Bullock, which will explain itself.

Very truly, yours,

WM. LOEB,
Secretary to the President.

Hon. WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

[Inclosure.]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL, DISTRICT OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Sioux Falls, December 8, 1906.

Hon. WM. LOEB, Jr.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LOEB: In giving the names of the towns "shot up" by the Twenty-fifth Infantry, the press dispatches from Washington do not mention Valentine, Nebr., 3 miles from Fort Niobrara.

Chief Deputy Carleton, of my office, informs me that he was in Valentine when the shooting occurred. It was on October 30, 1904. Several shots were fired into a house in which were a number of people, killing a woman and badly wounding a cowboy who was unhitching his horse near the house. No shots were fired from the house, nor was there any reason for the shooting by the negroes. Twelve negro soldiers were in the attacking party.

The local authorities did everything in their power to find the guilty parties, but, as at Brownsville, their comrades declined to aid in the apprehension of the murderers. The affair occurred at about 2 o'clock in the morning.

The house fired into was a dance house at the outskirts of the town and the woman killed was an inmate of the house, but this is not considered a good defense in the "wild and woolly West," and should not be in Washington, for murder.

Yours, truly,

SETH BULLOCK.

Mr. LODGE. Now, Mr. President, as I followed the Senator when he began to analyze the testimony——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I was necessarily occupied for a moment and could not follow the Senator. I understand now that he has stated that this regiment had been guilty of "shooting up" four other towns.

Mr. LODGE. I was simply stating what is in the record. I know nothing except what is there printed.

Mr. FORAKER. I read of one of those occurrences. I notice that it is a very different case from this, that it was a different battalion, and that it happened twenty-five years ago.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I repeat that even the Senator's profound researches of this record have not developed the fact that there are four cases stated here—one in 1885 at Sturgis, Territory of Dakota; one in 1899 at Winnemucca, Nev.; one in 1900 at El Paso, and one in 1904 at Niobrara.

Mr. FORAKER. I must except to the Senator's referring to my "profound researches." I have had no opportunity to examine the record at all, except a hasty glance I took at it while the message was being read yesterday. Therefore I was speaking at a great disadvantage; but I did say that there was one case. Of course, there are many things I have not seen.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has been passing on all the testimony.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the testimony of what occurred twenty-five years ago.

Mr. LODGE. It is an official document, showing also what members of the regiment did in Niobrara two years ago and in El Paso six years ago. It is all contained in official documents, and I suppose it is not necessary to verify them.

Mr. President, I should like very much—for I do not want to detain the Senate—to have the whole of the testimony of Mr. A. C. Moore, of which the Senator from Ohio read a part, printed in the RECORD with my remarks. It is on pages 445 and 446.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. A. C. MOORE takes stand. (Proprietor of Miller Hotel.)

Q. This committee is sitting for the purpose of getting information that will place the saddle on the right horse. You are running the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes.

Q. Are there any bullet holes in the hotel?—A. Yes; about six.

Q. Shot by whom?—A. By people; last night.

Q. What time?—A. About 12.

Q. Did you see anyone shoot?—A. No.

Q. Did you hear?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell what you know.—A. The first shooting started down by the garrison. The shooting still continued, and they came up the alley right by our rooms. They gave the command here and fired. Then they came out on Elizabeth street. There they gave the same command again—"Halt; fire!"

Q. Could you tell who they were—negroes or white people?—A. Well, it was a good, strong voice and English spoken.

Q. Could you see them?—A. No; I could not leave my wife; she was in hysterics.

Q. You heard those commands?—A. Yes; and heard them say, "There goes the son of a ——," and something else, "Get him!"

Q. Could you say whether it was a negro's voice?—A. I think it was. It was very coarse.

Q. After the command what did they do?—A. Well, they ran on down, and there was a shot or two fired then.

Q. Toward the corner of Thirteenth and the hotel?—A. Yes. Then they gave another command. The best that I could locate it was from this corner opposite the hotel. Then they fired, and must have fired that volley at the hotel, for there are the bullet holes showing that they must have been shot from that corner. One of them passed through a window facing and through a door and struck the wall.

Q. Have you got any of those bullets?—A. Yes; I gave them to Fred. Combe.

Q. What were they?—A. Steel jackets.

Q. How many shots did you hear?—A. About fifty.

Q. Where did they shoot the policeman—right here [pointing out of window of Wells's office]?—A. I do not know, but they were bound to have shot him when they came out of the alley, for then they hollowed, "There goes the son of a ——; get him!" Then I picked up a lot of bullets [meaning cartridges, evidently] in the alley, empty and loaded.

Q. What were they?—A. 1205, new Army gun, Springfield model.

Q. That is all you know?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether or not any of your guests actually saw the negro soldiers?—A. Yes; Mr. Borden and Mr. Chase had their heads out of the window and saw the squad of five or six. They shot just about then, and the bullets hit right close to the window. One bullet came through the screen, and when it hit the window went straight up.

(Excused.)

Mr. LODGE. I shall not detain the Senate by reading it, but I think when this statement about not seeing anybody is read it is just as well that the further statement should appear:

Then I picked up a lot of bullets [meaning cartridges, evidently] in the alley, empty and loaded.

Q. What were they?—A. 1205, new Army gun, Springfield model.

I think that might just as well go in the RECORD.

I should like the whole of Mr. Canada's testimony printed. I should like the statement of Doctor Combe, on the same page, printed; I should like the whole of the testimany of Victoriana Fernandez printed; I should like the whole of the testimony of Mr. Madison, of which the Senator read a part, printed. I merely desire that, as a portion has been read from the testimony of those witnesses, all they said may go into the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. C. S. CANADA called to the stand.

Q. We are inquiring into the matter of last night with a view to ascertaining who the guilty parties are. We know they were negro soldiers. If there is anything that would throw any light on the subject, we would like to have it.—A. I did not see a single man that I am sure. My room is up on third floor. As soon as the shooting began, I went down on second floor and went out on the gallery. I saw that policeman and saw that the horse was wounded. He staggered and fell. I could tell by his rather dark clothes that he was an officer.

Q. Could you see who fired the shots?—A. No; I could not give any description of the men. I could hear the peculiar click of the gun, and I would swear it was a rifle.

Q. Could you tell whether it was an ordinary rifle or a Krag?—A. They were the same as the shots fired in the alley.

Q. You could not hear them say anything?—A. Perhaps, if I had been listening for that purpose alone.

Q. How many shots were fired from the corner at the horse?—A. At least three.

Q. How many in all did you hear?—A. Not less than 150; perhaps 200. Between those two numbers. It is more or less a guess.

Q. Did you hear any commands? Hear "Fire," or anything that way?—A. The only thing I heard them say was, "We got him," when the horse fell.

Q. Did you see or hear anything that would lead you to believe that they were negro soldiers?—A. Nothing except the general tenor of the affair.

Q. The next firing was up the street?—A. Yes; they went on up the street firing.

Q. From the tone of the voice that you heard make the remark, "We got him," were they Americans or Mexicans?—A. I think they were negroes. I was raised among them and know their voices pretty well.

(Excused.)

Doctor Combe states what Mr. Odin, who is now out of the city, said in regard to the shooting (made in presence of Judge John Bartlett):

That about the middle of the night of August 13 he was standing at a window of his room in the Miller Hotel and he heard a squad of men coming down the alley; that they arrived at the corner of the alley and he recognized that they were five negro soldiers; that when they arrived at the intersection of Thirteenth street and this alley one, apparently in command, gave the order, "There he goes; shoot him." That immediately a volley was fired, and then one of the men leveled his piece at the window and fired, the bullet passing through the casing and going into the ceiling directly over his head. One of his children fell to the floor and he thought it was shot. His wife was present at the window.

(Judge Bartlett affirmed statement.)

VICTORIANA FERNANDEZ, policeman, takes stand.

Q. State what you saw.—A. I was asleep at Washington street. I was on day watch and was sleeping. I heard a single shot. I do not know whether six-shooter or gun. I went down town, down the street, and saw two men shoot at me. Do not know whether citizens or soldiers. I turned across the street into the alley. They shot at me again.

Q. Did you shoot back?—A. No; had no chance. They shot at me the third time—three men with big guns. I shot back. They were dressed in khaki pants.

Q. You can tell these army guns when they shoot?—A. Yes.

Q. These were army guns?—A. Yes.

I came on Sixteenth street. I saw a crowd at Mr. Tillman's saloon. I went inside and found Frank Natus lying down dead.

Q. How many shots did you hear last night altogether?—A. About fifty.

Q. Did you know any soldiers that fired?—A. No.

(Excused.)

Mr. C. C. MADISON takes the stand.

Q. We are here for the purpose of obtaining information touching what happened last night. Tell us everything you know about it. Who you saw shoot, if anybody.—A. We [Mr. Madison was accompanied by another tinner and could not be induced to converse in anything but the first person plural] did not see anything. The shooting took place 10 or 15 feet from where we were sleeping and we could hear them throw the cartridges in the guns. They were Springfield guns. I know what they sound like when a cartridge is thrown into them, and I heard a low whistle and heard somebody hollow "Halt!"

Q. How many shots did you hear?—A. Twenty or thirty in the alley and many more in the city.

Q. Did you hear the men talk?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they Americans or Mexicans?—A. They were negroes.

Q. Were you sleeping on ground floor?—A. Yes.

Q. Doors open?—A. Yes.

Q. Could you see anything when you looked out?—A. No; but we never put our heads out.

Q. Where did you hear them say "Halt?"—A. Out in the lot.

Q. How many were there?—A. Seven or eight.

Q. Which way did they go?—A. Toward the livery stable.

Q. Were you ever in the service?—A. Yes; five years, and I know the sound of cartridges when they are thrown in.

Q. Did you see or hear anything that would lead you to believe that they were negro soldiers?—A. Yes; I know by their talk that they were negroes.

Q. Did you see any soldiers?—A. No.

(Committee adjourned until 9 o'clock Wednesday, the 15th.)

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate. I merely wish to repeat what I have already said. I have not read the testimony. I want to see it all before I make up my mind as to the judgment which is to be passed on so grave a question as this.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that there is no Senator present who will object to the Committee on Military Affairs taking further testimony in regard to this very important case. A retired officer of the Army, who commanded this regiment for sixteen years, I have been told, will vouch for the statement of a number of these colored men as being as reliable as that of any men who can be found in this country, white or black. He having had experience with this regiment for sixteen years, I think it is only due that the Military Committee should have the power to summon him before them, in order to ascertain from him, as far as possible, the character of these soldiers and whether their truthfulness and veracity can be relied on in case they make affidavits.

If I am correctly informed as to the history of the Spanish-American war, it is reported that if it had not been for the gallant and courageous action of the Tenth Regiment of Cavalry at the battle of San Juan we might not now have the privilege of having in the White House that brave soldier and "square deal" and patriotic President of ours. As I understand, had it not been for the gallantry of the Tenth Regiment of Cavalry, a colored regiment, at that battle there might not have been a sufficient number of the Rough Riders left to tell the tale.

I hope the Senate will allow the Military Committee the opportunity and the privilege of fully investigating this matter.

Mr. FORAKER. I have modified my resolution, as I said I would, and I ask that it may be read as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution of the Senator from Ohio as modified.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to take such further testimony as may be necessary to establish the facts connected with the discharge of members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President to return to the Senate the bill (S. 6197) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Henry."

MODEL EXHIBIT OF PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, calling attention to the fact that no provision has been made in the legislative appropriation bill for the year 1908 providing for the renting of a building for the model exhibit of the Patent Office. I ask that the letter and accompanying papers be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asks for the printing of certain papers and their reference to the Committee on Appropriations. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

VETO MESSAGE—CHARLES E. HENRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without approval, Senate bill No. 6197, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Henry," as the Secretary of the Interior informs me that the records of the Pension Bureau show that the beneficiary died on November 3, 1906, prior to the passage of the bill, which would therefore be inoperative should it become a law.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 20, 1906.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the Annual Report of the Isthmian Canal Commission for the year ending December 1, 1906.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 20, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., as follows:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, for that spirit which came into the world nineteen hundred years ago, heralded by the angelic hosts singing, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," and which has been gradually diffusing itself over the earth, fructifying and ennobling the hearts of men, diminishing selfishness, increasing generosity, diminishing revenge, increasing mercy, diminishing hate, increasing brotherly love, diminishing war, and increasing peace. Grant, O most merciful Father, that the increase may become complete, that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Let Thy blessings attend these Thy servants and their families during the holiday recess and bring us together again at the appointed time in health, strength, and vigor, the better prepared to prosecute the work which Thou has given them to do. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent reference of the bill (H. R. 22667) for the relief of the people of Hartshorne, Ind. T., was changed from the Committee on the Public Lands to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 22584. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

SHOSHONE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21202) fixing time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be reported by the Clerk, the bill having been read in the House on Monday, December 17, 1906. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Wyoming to yield to me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, somewhat moved by the spirit of the season, I have not objected now upon the last day of the session before adjournment for the holidays to the request of the gentleman for consideration of the bill. I objected before for this reason: Under the practice of Congress recently in reference to opening Indian reservations we provide practically for a lottery. Those people who are fortunate enough to draw prizes in the lottery receive something better than the other people do. There are usually a great many applications, a few people draw the prizes, and it has seemed to me that when these few people draw the prizes and obtain something which their neighbors can not obtain, they ought to be compelled to strictly comply with the provisions of the law as it existed at the time they drew their prizes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Not at present. In a moment I will. As a matter of fact, in many of those cases it has become the custom of the lawyers and the doctors and the ministers and the merchants to put in their applications as claimants for this land, with no expectation whatever of ever living upon the land or ever becoming homesteaders.

But if they are lucky enough to draw the prize under which they may make an entry, they make the entry, and then at the proper time they sell their relinquishment of the entry to some poor sinner who wants to really live on the land, and that purchaser takes the relinquishment to the land office, files a relinquishment, at the same time filing upon the land himself; but the homesteaders have been compelled to pay to the fortunate drawers of prizes in the lottery a considerable sum of money for the privilege of becoming a homesteader.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I yield first to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that these lands are situated in a part of Wyoming where the altitude is very great and where the winters are long and rigorous, and also to the fact there are no settlements near these lands, and these people, if forced to go in there in the winter time, away from all settlements, where they have no conveniences of civilization, will have to suffer, and I do not think the gentleman would desire any man to be forced to go to a country to seek a homestead where they have to undergo such hardships to secure their rights as these people would have to undergo, as I understand the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. All these matters have been very carefully explained to me by the gentleman from Wyoming, but, as a matter of fact, Congress provided by law for the opening of this reservation at a time when Congress knew that the six months would expire in the middle of winter, and I have no doubt that in this case most of the people who really intended to occupy the land have all gone on the land and that most of the people who intended to sell their relinquishment are very anxious to have the time extended, because it is a difficult matter during the middle of winter to find a purchaser of the relinquishment; but when spring comes they are enabled to find purchasers for the land, and I dare say that a majority of the people who have made entries upon this land and have not yet taken possession never will become actual homesteaders. If it were not for the fact that a small portion, probably, or some portion of these people who have not yet taken possession are absolutely desirous of becoming real homesteaders, and if this resolution did not pass they would lose not only the right to this land, but the right to any homestead at all in the future, I would still object; and I simply want to say to gentlemen interested in these Indian reservation openings that so long as I am here and have the right to be heard and object I will in the future object to provisions which seem to me to give a preference to one class of people over another and a preference to those who are lucky enough to draw prizes over those who are unlucky enough to fail.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. While I agree very fully with most of what the gentleman has said, I would like to call his attention, however, to the fact that, at least as I understand the law, should one of those people sell their relinquishment now the purchaser would have six months within which to settle on the land, so that, as a matter of fact, if this transfer were made now it would give the purchaser until warm weather to make his actual settlement.

Mr. MANN. That is true, I suppose, but they can not find a purchaser in midwinter.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; if he was going to have six months to go on the land. People who are really interested in this legislation are those who for some reason or other have been unable to make their settlement, and it is rather a hardship to require them to make it at this time of the year.

Mr. MANN. Of course some people who want the land will buy a pig in a poke, but not many. Most of the purchasers want to see the land, and if these people want to sell the relinquishment in midwinter the purchaser can not see the land——

Mr. NORRIS. He will have six months——

Mr. MANN. But he has to make the purchase of the relinquishment before he can see the land.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have had a very interesting discussion of this matter from the standpoint of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who suggests some things that might happen, and I ask the indulgence of the House for just a moment while I state the facts as they do exist.

The fact is that if there were people who drew what might be considered prizes in this lottery—particular land—they would not be affected by this legislation, for the men who had the first choice of entry naturally located in the accessible portion of the reservation adjacent to the newly established towns, and in order to prevent the possibility of a contest they immediately settled upon their lands. It was possible to do so because of the proximity of settlements and stores and opportunities to secure lumber. That is true also of the settlers who lived in the vicinity of the reservation after its opening. But the entrymen came from Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan, and Indiana, and Texas to file upon these lands. Many of them, as well as some of the people who lived in the locality, took lands at quite a distance from the towns, at quite a distance from the railway, where it was utterly impossible to make settlement in the two months and a half of good weather succeeding the date of their entry. Those men could not without great hardship get into that region in the middle of winter, build their houses, and establish themselves and their families upon the land. If there are any entrymen on these lands affected by this bill who have in their mind the thought that they may sometime relinquish their right, none such has come to my knowledge, and a knowledge that is pretty general in regard to the conditions as they exist. This legislation is necessary, owing to the fact that Congress said when these men should file. It was not optional with them. They must file at a time when the expiration of the six months brought them into the middle of the winter, on desert lands far from railways, far from timber supply, inhospitable in the middle of winter, in a severe climate, at an altitude of 5,000 feet above sea level. This is the usual relief granted to honest, intending settlers under similar circumstances.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the six months' provision to which reference has been made is a general law, applicable to all cases. The man who takes public land in Kansas at any time of the year would have six months after his first filing in which to occupy the land. This is a general provision. The application of this general provision to the opening in Wyoming at this high altitude in this particular instance makes it so that either the original opening had to be too early in the season or the actual occupation had to be too late in the season. The first bill proposed to make the opening early in the spring, and it was found that the floods were such and the condition of the climate was such that it would prove a very great inconvenience to the intending settlers to have to go and select their lands at that time. So the bill was amended, putting the entry at a later date in the summer, and that later date, of course, carried the six months forward into the winter again.

Mr. MANN. To how late in the season does this resolution extend the time?

Mr. LACEY. To the 15th of May.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman contend that if this resolution extends the time to May 15 for next spring that May 15 of last spring would have been so early that nobody could get in on account of high water and the floods?

Mr. LACEY. That is a very natural suggestion. But my friend, when he comes to understand the facts, will see, whilst it seems correct, it does not hit the situation. A railroad has been extended since then. At the time this opening was proposed there was no railroad. Bridges have been built since then, so that, so far as the floods are concerned, the lands will be accessible at the time named; and, in fact, if anyone now has his land, and, having selected it, wants to cultivate any of it next year, he will have to go in early enough in the spring to do that.

Mr. MANN. Is there any railroad through this land now?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. They would still have the same difficulties about floods this spring as they had last spring?

Mr. LACEY. The railroad crosses the streams and they have access to the land now.

Mr. MANN. The railroad does not run into the land?

Mr. LACEY. It runs accross the streams to the land, so they have access now that they did not have then.

Mr. MANN. There will be the same condition next spring that there was last spring?

Mr. LACEY. No. The land is now accessible.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman who had charge of the bill last spring insisted to the House that June or May was not too early for the opening last spring.

Mr. LACEY. They insisted on making it later.

Mr. MANN. They insisted on making it early.

Mr. LACEY. No; later. I am on both committees, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It was the gentleman from New York who insisted on having it delayed. The gentleman who introduced the bill and the committee insisted on having it earlier.

Mr. LACEY. It was not early; the proposition was to make it in May. It was to allow it to be later in the season, in order to give them better time to search and occupy the lands. Now a portion of these lands can not be settled upon at all until they get water upon them, at least not successfully. They will have to build their little buildings and take possession, but they can not farm the land until they secure water. It is not like the ordinary settlement in Nebraska, the Dakotas, or Kansas. It is irrigable land. Now, let me make this suggestion: The very purpose that the gentleman from Illinois seems to have in his mind, and which he says would be bad for all parties and ought not to be carried out, would, by refusal to protect these men in their rights in these lands, be to compel them to make relinquishment to some one who will file a new settlement, and will thus have his time extended later. In other words, it would give them time running over into next spring, late enough for the weather to permit occupancy. But if the time were extended as suggested, these original locators will have time to go on and occupy their own land instead of being compelled to relinquish. They will, if the law is not modified, be compelled to relinquish so as to allow a new settler to obtain the right to move on the land next spring instead of in midwinter.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he would be in favor of a uniform law extending the time to apply to all homestead settlers; those who went up into the Shoshone country and were unfortunate or not successful in drawing in the lottery and went into Montana or some part of Wyoming or into South Dakota and made homesteads? Would the gentleman be willing to consent that a law might be passed extending this right to them and give them additional time?

Mr. LACEY. I will ask the gentleman if he has introduced such a bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have not.

Mr. LACEY. When the gentleman introduces such a bill as that we will consider it. We are talking about a peculiar situation applicable to one place. When the other question is taken up by the committee, it will be time enough to answer.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House resolution 647, the distribution of the annual message of the President.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House resolution 647, the distribution of the President's message.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House resolution 647, having reference to the President's message.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take any time in an explanation of this resolution. It is the same old resolution which the House has had before it a good many times, taking up the different parts of the President's annual message and referring them to the appropriate committees. There are a couple of amendments suggested by the committee—and only two—since it was introduced. One of them is to strike out the word as to "Cuba" in referring to the Committee on Insular Affairs matters referring to insular affairs. The word "Cuba" got into the resolution through a mistake—I suppose by the assistant clerk. I did not know that it was in myself. The other is on page 2, line 7, striking out the words "intercolonial railways and cables." The language itself was put in by the House two or three years ago, and it seemed to the committee rather inapt. But aside from that there was no allusion in the President's message to either of these subjects; so the committee proposes to strike out these words by an amendment. Otherwise the resolution is in the form adopted by the House a year ago, adding the new subjects as far as they are referred to in the message.

Mr HEPBURN. Will the gentleman state why it was that a change was made upon the question of cables? The question of cables has always been under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. PAYNE. The words are "intercolonial railways and cables." The committee could not recall any intercolonial railway. There may be intercolonial cables, but as the message did not refer to either of these subjects the suggestion was made of an amendment to strike the words out. It was not my amendment, I will say to the gentleman, but it was adopted by the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. The very fact that it was not in there would not be a reason for striking it out, it seems to me.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman know anything on the subject of intercolonial railways?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I do not know anything about them, and I do not know how you would get railways of that kind.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know how that got in there.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not authorized by the committee to accept any amendments, and I think "intercolonial railways" ought to be stricken out. So far as "intercolonial cables" are concerned, if the gentleman desires it, I have no personal objection to those words remaining.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think they ought to be retained.

Mr. PAYNE. While, as I say, I am not authorized by the committee to accept any amendments, yet if the gentleman wishes to move an amendment to the amendment, so as to leave in "intercolonial cables," and strike out the "railways," I hope he will do so.

Mr. DALZELL. This is a resolution referring the subjects in the President's message. There is no such subject in the President's message as intercolonial railways.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that, but it takes for its model the resolution of the preceding session, and I do not want this to become a precedent.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no danger of that.

Mr. HEPBURN. It has been done in this case, and the gentleman gives as a reason because he found it in the old one.

Mr. PAYNE. In preparing the resolution we struck out a number of things that were in the former resolution, because there was no reference to them in the message, and that is the usual custom in preparing the resolution.

Mr. HEPBURN. With the understanding that this is not to be regarded as a precedent, I have no objection to its going, under the circumstances, as the gentleman has reported it. But I do not want it to be said next time that it is the custom to do thus and so.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman that I can not see how it can be regarded as a precedent, because no one would dispute the right of the gentleman's committee to consider the subject of intercolonial railways, if there were any such. Of course there can not be. And no one will dispute the right of the gentleman's committee to consider the subject of intercolonial cables, whenever that subject is referred to in a President's message.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow a question? I do not understand what an "intercolonial cable" is. We have authority to report from the Military Committee as to cables to Alaska for the Signal Service.

Mr. PAYNE. That would not be regarded as an intercolonial cable; but in the Philippine Islands there are cables stretching between the islands, and while I do not think the expression "intercolonial" is an apt one, yet it has reference to that.

Mr. PARKER. "Colonial" is a very bad expression.

Mr. PAYNE. "Interisland" would be a very much better term.

Mr. PARKER. The language is to be stricken out altogether as reported by the committee?

Mr. PAYNE. That is the amendment reported by the committee, to which, I understand, the gentleman from Iowa, under the express disclaimer that it establishes no precedent, has no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well, sir.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York with reference to the change indicated on page 3, striking out the words "and to Cuba." Are there no references to relations with Cuba in the message, or why are the words to be stricken out?

Mr. PAYNE. There was a reference to Cuba in the message, but the House a year ago struck out those words, and I endeavored to have them stricken out when this resolution was drawn, but the clerk who prepared the resolution made a mistake in regard to that. The reason is that Cuba has become a foreign country, and, of course, that subject will go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Insular Committee loses jurisdiction of it through that fact.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, Cuba has always been a foreign country, has it not?

Mr. PAYNE. No; at least while it was under the control of the United States and before a government had been formed there the jurisdiction of it was given to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. OLMSTED. Are we not exercising some sort of control over there just now?

Mr. PAYNE. We are exercising a large measure of control there now, but still it has not interfered with the relations of Cuba as a foreign country in any other respect. We are trying to preserve it as a foreign country, although it is a pretty hard job.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is a rule of the House expressly providing that matters relating to Cuba shall go to the Committee on Insular Affairs. Why should the practice be changed?

Mr. HEPBURN. The rule of the House ought to be changed.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see how this changes the rule which refers foreign affairs to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. OLMSTED. It violates the other rule.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if all of the subjects discussed by the President have been respectively treated by being referred to appropriate committees?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the endeavor has been to refer them all to appropriate committees. Has the gentleman anything in his mind that he thinks is not included in the resolution?

Mr. HEPBURN. Nothing that I desire specifically to discuss at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To what committee has that portion of the President's message about race suicide and divorce been referred?

Mr. PAYNE. That would naturally go to the Committee on the Judiciary, as that involves an amendment to the Constitution, and we refer all matters of that kind to that committee. If Congress in its wisdom should see fit to appoint a special committee having that in charge, then the matter might be reconsidered and that part of the message go to that special committee. As I look around me I could almost name the special committee well suited to have that matter in charge, but I do not wish to be personal.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me it would need an amendment to somebody's constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman why, in reference to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the committee reports striking out the intercolonial railways and cables?

Mr. PAYNE. I fully explained that a few moments ago to the able chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, who was satisfied to have it go out under the statement that was made at the time. There is nothing in the message referring to those subjects is one complete answer to it.

Mr. MANN. I am delighted to know that there is one subject that was not touched upon in the message.

Mr. PAYNE. I explained to the committee how this case came to be brought up in the committee; the language itself is inapt, to say the least. There are no intercolonial railways; there are what might be called intercolonial cables, but it would be more appropriate to call them interisland cables.

Mr. MANN. The reason I ask the question is because it is a live question.

Mr. PAYNE. There is nothing in the message about it.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but this is a sort of a direction to the Speaker in referring these matters.

Mr. PAYNE. No; I might say that the gentleman from Iowa is satisfied that it is not a precedent; that all these questions would go to his committee, the committee of which the gentleman from Illinois is such an honorable member; they would go to that committee by direction of the Speaker of the House, and would have to go there.

Mr. MANN. Of course I think they ought to go there, but if the House adopts an amendment striking out cables—where it adopts an amendment striking out cables from the United States to Porto Rico and from Porto Rico to Panama, it is in the nature of a direction. Now, at the last session of Congress they had that proposition before three different committees at the same time; when they couldn't work one committee they would try to work another committee. I do not say improperly for all the propositions were proper, but if this is to be construed as an expression of opinion on the part of the House that that proposition should be taken away from the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I would like to know it.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Illinois is getting into exactly the same train of mind as the chairman of the committee, who made almost that same remark.

Mr. MANN. That is a great credit to me.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it is creditable to both gentlemen. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will emulate the gentleman from Iowa. I replied to him that I could not see how it was to be construed as a precedent, because there was nothing on that subject to refer to this committee, and it was stricken out on that ground. That being so, I did not see how it could establish any precedent. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will still follow the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. All I wanted was the assurance of the gentleman from New York to me, because I knew as far as the merits of the proposition were concerned, the gentleman from Iowa is always able to take care of the jurisdistion of his committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I agree to that most fully. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions, I suggest that the amendments be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, strike out the words "intercolonial railways and cables."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 15, strike out the words "and to Cuba."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard just a moment on that amendment. It seems to me that it ought not to prevail. Rule 11 of this House provides for the assignment of matters to committees, and provides specifically that all matters "pertaining to the islands which came to the United States through the treaty of 1899 with Spain, and to Cuba" shall be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs. Now, the relations of this Government to Cuba are somewhat the same as they were when that rule was adopted.

The Committee on Insular Affairs is a very large committee of nineteen members. The chairman is not here to-day. I think that if he were he would oppose this amendment, and I feel I ought to, in his behalf, oppose it. I do not see any particularly good reason why the plain letter of the rule should be violated in the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] that the conditions under which that rule was made are entirely different from what they are now. It would not be proper, it seems to me, for us to refer matters relating to Cuba under that rule. Cuba is now an independent country. Our position down there does not correspond in the least degree to what it did when that rule was adopted, and if the gentleman reads the context it will be apparent to him that it has no reference, strictly construed, to the conditions that now exist. I think it would not be the proper thing, taking into consideration our relations to Cuba, to make any such order.

Mr. OLMSTED. We are exercising now a certain control there, different perhaps from that which we exercised when the rule was adopted.

Mr. PAYNE. A year ago this question came up precisely as it does to-day. I think the chairman of the gentleman's committee was here at the time. I think the gentleman has got the size of that committee rather large, because there are no committees in the House of nineteen members.

Mr. OLMSTED. There are nineteen members accredited to this committee. I have just counted them.

Mr. PAYNE. There are only eighteen under the rule. I think perhaps the Commissioner was added as a sort of an advisory member. I want to say that a year ago this was stricken out, because we have given Cuba a separate government. Things have transpired during the past year by which we have had to go down there and try to maintain that separate government on the part of Cuba. I think it would be very unwise in the face of that, and in the face of the insinuations that have been thrown out that we are trying to grasp Cuba, to refer this part of the message to a committee that is organized for the express purpose of taking care of the insular possessions of the United States.

Mr. OLMSTED. When the Committee on Insular Affairs was created and this rule adopted we were not trying to grasp anything in Cuba any more than we are to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman must see the difference. They had not formed a government. We were striving then to give them a separate government, and they were under the control of the United States. We had a military government down there at that time. It was under the control of the United States then, but we were striving to form an independent government. It was not formed until years afterwards.

Mr. OLMSTED. Are we not trying to form one there now?

Mr. PAYNE. The moment it was formed we struck out that part of the resolution. It only crept in this time by mistake, because the committee tried to conform to the will of the House when the matter was up before. The trouble was that the gentleman probably was absent then, though I think the chairman of his committee was present, and it went out with the universal consent on the part of all Members of the House without discussion.

Mr. OLMSTED. Conditions have changed since then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will excuse the interruption, there is another and very vital difference. At that time Cuba was under the flag of the United States. That was the flag flying there. The flag flying in Cuba now is the Cuban flag.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] a question. I have not had time to read the President's message as thoroughly as I shall do, but I would like to know if there is any portion containing any references to the Isle of Pines. Where does that come in this resolution? That is a very important matter.

Mr. PAYNE. I don't think there is a word in the message about the Isle of Pines. If there were, it would go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, there is nothing about it, as I can see, in this resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I don't think there is anything in the message about it. That would be a good reason for its not being in the resolution. I want to say to the gentleman that I went through the message very carefully for the purpose of drawing this resolution, and marked in the margin the reference to each subject as I went along and then dictated the resolution from that. I am very confident the gentleman can not find anything in the message with reference to the Isle of Pines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not say that I have. On the contrary, I say that I have not read the message as carefully as I shall do. It is a very important matter. The Lord knows, I believe, we do not want any more colored folks under our flag. Still a great many of our white people have gone there and have invested their money there and are very much interested in it, and the Senate has discussed the subject.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course if anything should come up hereafter, if any petition should be brought in or any bill introduced, it will be up to the Speaker to refer it in the first instance, and for the House to correct the reference if the House is not satisfied with it. This will not influence it in any way, because there is nothing in the message with reference to the Isle of Pines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That being the case——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York permit——

Mr. OLMSTED. I supposed I had the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. This is under the five-minute rule, Mr. Chairman. This debate on the amendment is under the five-minute rule.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that rather than involve the country in any international complication, as gentlemen seem to fear, I withdraw my opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the resolution with amendments to the House with the recommendation that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House resolution 647, for the disposition of the President's message, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that the resolution as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, they will be voted upon together.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. To submit a question for unanimous consent for the reprint of a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of a thousand copies of the bill H. R. 13304 and the report thereon. There is a great deal of demand for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13304) to provide a suitable memorial to the memory of Christopher Columbus.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for a reprint of a thousand copies of this bill and the report thereon. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE HERDIC COMPANY.

Mr. CARTER. I present a paper by Margaret Sullivan Burke, of Washington, D. C., relative to the Metropolitan Coach Company in the District of Columbia, commonly known as the "Herdic Company." I move that it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

LARVAN GORDON.

Mr. BERRY. I report back favorably from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 5869) for the relief of Larvan Gordon, and I submit a report thereon. There are only a few lines of the bill, which is for the relief of a party who is very worthy, and it is especially important that it should be passed. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to confirm homestead entry No. 24813, made at the Camden, Ark., land office, by Larvan Gordon, of Dial, Howard County, Ark., and cause a patent to the land embraced within said entry to be issued to said Larvan Gordon, provided there is no valid adverse claim for such land.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BERRY. The committee also reports to strike out the preamble.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The preamble will be stricken out, in the absence of objection.

ENTRIES ON CROW INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21678) to provide for the extension of time within which homestead entrymen may establish their residence upon certain lands which were heretofore a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, within the counties of Yellowstone and Rosebud, in the State of Montana, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7509) granting an increase of pension to William T. Bennett;

A bill (S. 7510) granting an increase of pension to Millard F. Burrows; and

A bill (S. 7511) granting an increase of pension to James Fisher (with accompanying papers).

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 7512) to provide for an additional land district in the State of Montana, to be known as the Glasgow land district; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7513) granting an increase of pension to Alexander M. Cowgill; and

A bill (S. 7514) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Cornelius.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 7515) to authorize the Missouri River Improvement Company, a Montana corporation, to construct a dam or dams across the Missouri River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 7516) granting an increase of pension to Margaret T. Everly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 7517) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Searle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7518) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Cary; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, which I ask may lie on the table, and be printed.

I wish to give notice that on Monday, January 14, I shall submit to the Senate some remarks upon this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Substitute for section 1 the following:

That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office, restaurant, saloon, hotel, apartment house, pool room, theater, or bowling alley, nor during school hours in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages, selling newspapers, or doing other light outdoor work, nor shall such child be employed before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to children between the ages of 12 and 16 years employed in the Senate and House of Representatives nor to children between such ages who are regularly engaged in learning a trade.

ANDREW H. RUSSELL AND WILLIAM R. LIVERMORE.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2073) for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for compensation and actual traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MONEY submitted an amendment authorizing the Court of Claims as a body to employ, for work necessary to be performed, an auditor or clerk for any of its judges, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment directing the Court of Claims to consider and render final judgment in the matter of the claims against the Mississippi Choctaws of James E. Arnold, his associates and assigns, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McENERY submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the chief clerk and cashier, office of Assistant Treasurer at New Orleans, from $2,250 to $2,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

On motion of Mr. HANSBROUGH, it was Ordered, That 500 copies of S. 7326, to amend an act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond tax free of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials," approved June 7, 1906, be printed for the use of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 21202. An act fixing time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on same, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR GORMAN.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, January 26, 1907, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of my late colleague, Hon. Arthur Pue Gorman.

TREATY WITH JAPAN.

Mr. GEARIN. Mr. President, I give notice that on Monday next after the conclusion of the routine morning business I shall call up Senate resolution 197, advising that negotiations be entered into with the Japanese Government with a view to secure a modification of the existing treaty with Japan, etc., for the purpose of making some remarks upon it.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL POWERS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, after the close of the routine morning business, I shall call up Senate resolution No. 200, defining the rights delegated to the Government and those reserved to the States, etc., for the purpose of making some remarks thereon.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I gave notice on the 18th of last month that I would call up the pension bill for consideration this morning. I understand that the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is prepared to speak upon the resolution relating to the Brownsville affair and is very anxious to go on this morning. I wish, therefore, to change that notice so that I may call up the bill after the routine morning business to-morrow, and I hope that I shall be able to have it considered at that time—that is, considered until 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not wish to interfere with the consideration of the bill the Senator from North Dakota has given notice that he desires to bring up for consideration, but I wish to call attention to the fact that Senate resolution 208, which I offered on the last day before we adjourned for the vacation, is now before the Senate, as I understand it. The resolution we then had under consideration was No. 181. I asked and obtained unanimous consent to modify the resolution and offered it in a different form as another resolution. It is now numbered 208, and it went over, and to-day will come up, I understand. It is not the old resolution, but a new resolution modified so as to make it mandatory instead of giving an option to the Committee on Military Affairs to take testimony. I ask that that resolution may be laid before the Senate, and then I will come to an understanding with the Senator from North Dakota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks that the resolution indicated by him be laid before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the modified resolution submitted by Mr. FORAKER December 20, 1906, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to take such further testimony as may be necessary to establish the facts connected with the discharge of members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, what I inquire about is the parliamentary status of the resolution. I understand that it is now before the Senate for consideration, and of right. I do not wish to crowd out the Senator from North Dakota——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the resolution is merely a modification of the resolution previously introduced, and that its status would be governed by the status of the resolution of which it is a modification.

Mr. FORAKER. It does not signify on the face of it that it is a modification. I stated when Senate resolution 181 was under consideration that I would, if given unanimous consent, modify my resolution. When I undertook to modify it I found it so difficult to do it that I had to change it throughout almost. I simply drafted it in this form and offered it, and I see that the clerks have numbered it as a separate resolution. I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] desires to speak on the resolution this morning, and I merely want, if it is in order, to have it before the Senate so that he may have an opportunity to speak on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair put the Senator's request for unanimous consent that the resolution should be placed before the Senate this morning, and the Chair heard no objection to that request. The resolution was read, and the Chair understands that it is now before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I am willing to yield at any time to the Senator from North Dakota after the Senator from Texas has spoken, so that he may bring up the bill he speaks of.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question concerning the bill he proposes to call up to-morrow, I understood him to say. I wish to ask the Senator if it is his intention to press that bill to a vote. It is a very important measure, and I would want to look into the question pretty carefully before I should be prepared to cast a vote on it. I should like to know the purpose the Senator has in view. If it is only to discuss the bill and then have it laid aside, of course there can be no objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. In answer to the Senator from New Hampshire I would say that my intention is simply to call up the bill for discussion during the morning hour, with a view, however, to having an agreement by which it may be made the unfinished business very soon. It has already been on the Calendar since April 2 of last year, so Senators have had considerable time to consider it.

Now, Mr. President, while I am on my feet I desire to ask a question about the status of this resolution. I do not understand that the resolution has any special right of way for any particular day in the future by reason of anything that has been done in reference to it to-day. It would have to be called up, I understand, to-morrow, the same as any other bill or resolution, and have the consent of the Senate to consider it. I have already yielded to-day to the Senator from Texas for the purpose of enabling him to discuss the resolution. I simply want to know whether that in any way interferes with the notice which I just now gave that I would call up for consideration briefly the pension bill to-morrow after the routine morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that under the rule the resolution has no rights beyond the morning hour. It would have to be called up the same as any other subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is as I understand it.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from North Dakota. To what pension bill is it that he alludes?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is a general service pension bill.

Mr. MONEY. A general service pension bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; Order of Business 2293. The number of the bill is Senate 976.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, when this matter was first presented to the Senate it occurred to me, for reasons which need not be stated, to remain silent, although it concerned some of the people of Texas. Since then, and in my absence from the city, great injustice has been done the people of Brownsville, which calls for that refutation which, I think, the facts easily and conclusively establish.

Three companies of negro troops of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were stationed last July at Fort Brown, which is within the corporate limits of the city of Brownsville. Some of these troops were ignorant, disrespectful, and insolent. At other stations men of the same companies had been engaged in disturbances and riots which culminated in murder. At Brownsville, previous to August 13, the conduct of some of these soldiers was offensive to the citizens, especially to women, and on the 12th day of August a criminal assault was made upon one of the most reputable women of the city by a brutal negro soldier. Complaint of this was made the next day to the commanding officer, though no arrest has yet been made, and in view of the just indignation of the people the mayor of the city requested this officer not to permit the soldiers on the streets of the city that night. Such an order was entered, which provoked resentment on the part of the soldiers. About midnight that night, August 13, some fifteen or twenty of the soldiers made an assault upon the city with arms; fired recklessly and wantonly into many residences, business houses, and hotels; terrified women and children, who miraculously escaped injury or death; seriously wounded the lieutenant of police, and murdered an inoffensive citizen. Notwithstanding this cowardly and inhuman assault, the people of Brownsville, although excited and indignant, kept the peace, Mr. President, refrained from acts of violence, and contented themselves with appealing to the State and Federal authorities for protection.

What return, sir, is made to them in some quarters for this act of self-restraint and obedience to law? They are practically charged with rioting among themselves, with firing without provocation upon their own people, with putting their women and children in jeopardy of life, with wounding their peace officer and murdering their fellow-citizen. Upon considerations and motives which I can not pretend to fathom, no people were ever more unjustly and cruelly assailed.

Nor, Mr. President, have accusations stopped with the people of Brownsville. Captain McDonald, of the Texas Rangers, and Major Blocksom, of the United States Army, in their efforts under orders to detect these midnight assassins, have been sharply and severely arraigned. I know McDonald well. Plain and rough of manner and of speech, he is as honest and as truthful as he is fearless and brave. He is a worthy successor, Mr. President, in courage and devotion to duty of Hays and Ford and McCullough and McNally, who made the Texas Rangers famous on the frontier. My acquaintance with Major Blocksom has not been so long, and he needs no defense, but I am glad to say here in my place that he is a gentleman by birth and instinct; that he is an accomplished and conscientious officer, and that his military record is without blemish or stain.

When the record in this case was presented to the President, all the soldiers denying participation in or knowledge of the crimes committed at Brownsville, he discharged the entire battalion without honor before the expiration of the term of enlistment, through the Secretary of War. This action of the President is challenged as unauthorized by law, and this raises the important legal question involved in this controversy.

It has been intimated that the discharge was ordered because the troops were negroes. But in a consideration of the law of the case it is not essential to inquire whether the discharge was ordered because the troops were negroes any more than to inquire whether the controversy arose here because the troops were negroes.

It is well to say at the outset that while, in my judgment, the President was authorized to discharge the soldiers without honor, to be followed by the disqualifications incident to such discharge provided by law and the Army Regulations, so much of the order as purports to debar them from civil employment under the Federal Government forever is inoperative as beyond his authority. Under the civil-service rules they appear to be ineligible to civil appointments for one year. The order doubtless was not intended to apply to civil employment through elective offices, and obviously could not affect such cases. Moreover, that portion of the order which seeks to debar them from reenlisting in the Army is without legal force in itself. Their reenlistment, as it may depend upon this question, is governed and controlled by the act of Congress of 1894, which provides that no soldier shall be again enlisted in the Army whose previous service has not been honest and faithful.

The general contention that the discharge of the troops in this case is without warrant of law is based upon a confusion of the discharge and the punishment of enlisted men in the Army and upon a misconception of the powers of the President and a court-martial in respect to such matters. The Constitution declares that the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States. It may be that this provision vests in the President ample powers respecting discipline which would enable him to exercise fully the supreme command, but in my view of the question it is unnecessary to consider this phase of the subject, because undoubtedly such powers as are necessary in this case are expressly devolved upon him by the Articles of War.

The Constitution also declares that the Congress shall have power to "make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." Pursuant to this authority Congress has made such rules for the land forces, and they are incorporated in section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and are known as the Articles of War. From time to time, under the constitutional authority of Commander in Chief, regulations for the Army, not inconsistent with the Articles of War, have been promulgated by the Executive. By an Executive order, September 15, 1904, the latest regulations for the Army were promulgated by the President. Whether there can be any conflict between the power of the President to command the Army and the power of the Congress to make rules for its government is of no consequence in this discussion, for there is, on the subject of discharging the enlisted men in this instance, no conflict in the rules made by the Congress and those made by the President. The Articles of War enacted by the Congress clearly distinguish between the discharge of enlisted men prior to the expiration of the term of service in the interest of military discipline and for the good of the service and the punishment of such men for criminal offenses which are named in the Articles of War. Men may be discharged under the Articles of War, as provided in the fourth article, by the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial, but they can only be punished for the offenses named as a court-martial may direct.

A court-martial, while it may by sentence order the discharge of enlisted men, is not an essential intermediary when the discharge is ordered by the President, the Secretary of War, or the commanding officer of a department. Discharge of enlisted men is not necessarily, therefore, within the meaning of the Articles of War, punishment for criminal offenses denounced by them, except when done by sentence of a general court-martial, which from the very nature of the case implies trial, conviction, and sentence in a criminal action cognizable in such military tribunal. That discharges may be ordered by way of punishment is also recognized by section 1290, Revised Statutes, where it is provided: "When a soldier is discharged from the service (except by way of punishment) he shall be allowed transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment." The Articles of War do not expressly classify discharges, but naturally and logically they are classified into honorable and dishonorable discharges. This classification, so far as any specific law or regulation is concerned, though in practice discharges without honor were previously recognized, obtained until 1893, when by Circular 15 from the headquarters of the Army, cases were specified in which discharges without honor would be given. It had been the practice of the Government prior to 1893, though in theory only honorable and dishonorable discharges were known, to give dishonorable discharges, eo nomine, by the Executive, when technically they were not dishonorable because not imposed by the sentence of a general court-martial. The Circular 15 of 1893 merely gave expression to this construction and practice and a name to the discharge. After this, therefore, three classes of discharges were expressly recognized—the honorable, the dishonorable, and the discharge without honor. The significance of an honorable discharge is obvious. Under the Articles of War, the regulations of the Army, and the practice of the Government for more than a century dishonorable discharges are those which may be given only in pursuance of a sentence of a general court-martial. As a consequence and of necessity dishonorable discharges can only be given as punishment for the commission of offenses which are named in the Articles of War. Other punishment, it is true, may be imposed by courts-martial for the commission of such offenses, within the limitations prescribed in the Articles of War, but dishonorable discharges can only be given by sentence of courts-martial, and that by way of punishment for offenses named in the Articles of War. There is a middle class of discharges, those which are not strictly honorable nor strictly dishonorable, those where there is a failure to discharge enlisted men with honor.

This class of discharges is known as discharges without honor, and may be generally defined to be discharges given not as punishment for offenses named in the Articles of War, but for causes tainting the character of the discharge or because the Government has not been served honestly and faithfully. It is the settled doctrine of the Judge-Advocate-General's Office, and always has been, that such a discharge is not a punishment and need not be given by sentence of a general court-martial. (Dig. Op. Judge Adv. Gen., 1901, p. 319.) The present very able Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, in his report of November 23, 1906, to the Secretary of War, thus states the authority of the President to discharge without honor in this case:

DISCHARGES.

The separation of an enlisted man from the military service is regulated by the requirements of the Fourth Article of War, which provides that—

"ART. 4. No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court martial."

It will be noted that the article above cited contemplates at least two classes of discharges: (1) Honorable discharges, which are given when the term prescribed in the enlistment contract has been served honestly and faithfully; (2) dishonorable discharges, which are given in pursuance of a sentence of a general court-martial. Otherwise the classification of discharges has never been assumed by Congress, but has been left by it to the executive branch of the Government. At present there are three kinds of discharges expressly recognized, to wit: The honorable, the dishonorable, and the discharge without honor. The dishonorable discharge is given only in the case of discharge by sentence of court-martial. The discharge without honor is given in the cases first specified in Circular 15, Headquarters of the Army, 1893, but this circular did not create such discharge; it merely gave it a name. Before the issue of the circular and as far back as the rebellion (notwithstanding that it was from time to time theoretically asserted that the only kind of discharges known to the law were the honorable and the dishonorable, and that all discharges except by sentence of court-martial were honorable) a third kind of discharge was out of necessity resorted to. It is now recognized that there is a kind of discharge which is neither honorable nor technically dishonorable, but must be classified by itself. This is the "discharge without honor."

There were many soldiers summarily discharged during the rebellion for causes tainting the character of their discharges. In numerous cases the orders were made to read dishonorably discharged, although a dishonorable discharge, in the technical sense of that term, can not be imposed except by sentence of a court-martial. A summary discharge can not be a dishonorable discharge, if the term is used in such technical sense, but it may be for a cause tainting the character of the discharge—a discharge manifestly not honorable. Such a summary discharge is now called "a discharge without honor." Its name, however, is only important as a recognition of a discharge, not technically dishonorable, but not honorable in fact. It might not be going too far to say that when soldiers were summarily "dishonorably discharged" during the rebellion the order was so worded simply because the soldier had done something to disgrace the service, and could not be in fact honorably discharged.

* * * * * * *

Although not having committed an offense of sufficient gravity to warrant his trial by court-martial, the conduct of a soldier may be such as to warrant the termination of his enlistment contract because he has not served the Government honestly and faithfully, as he is required to do by the engagement which is embodied in his oath of enlistment. In such a case, when reasonable efforts have been put forth with a view to the correction of his faults, his enlistment contract may be annulled in the manner prescribed in the fourth article of war. The issue of discharges without honor is regulated by paragraph 148 of the Army Regulations, which prescribes, inter alia, that the form for discharge without honor will be used in the following cases:

"148. Blank forms for discharge and final statements will be furnished by The Military Secretary of the Army, and will be retained in the personal custody of company commanders. Those for discharge will be of three classes: For honorable discharge, for dishonorable discharge, and for discharge without honor. They will be used as follows:

* * * * * * *

"2. The blank for discharge without honor when a soldier is discharged:

"(a) Without trial, on account of fraudulent enlistment.

"(b) Without trial, on account of having become disqualified for service, physically or in character, through his own misconduct.

"(c) On account of imprisonment under sentence of a civil court.

"(d) Where the service has not been honest and faithful; that is, where the service does not warrant his reenlistment.

"(e) When discharge without honor is specially ordered by the Secretary of War for any other reason."

* * * * * * *

Paragraph 146 of the Army Regulations contains certain provisions which, if carefully read, will be found to be in entire harmony with the requirements of paragraph 148, above cited. Paragraph 146 applies exclusively to the case of a discharge at expiration of the soldier's term of enlistment and to the form of discharge which shall be used in that case, and provides that:

"146. The character given on a discharge will be signed by the company or detachment commander, and great care will be taken that no injustice is done the soldier. If the soldier's service has been honest and faithful he will be entitled to such character as will warrant his reenlistment—that is, to character at least "good." Where the company commander deems the service not honest and faithful, he shall, if practicable, so notify the soldier at least thirty days prior to discharge, and shall at the same time notify the commanding officer, who will in every such case convene a board of officers, three if practicable, to determine whether the soldier's service has been honest and faithful. The soldier will in every case be given a hearing before the board.

"If the company commander is the commanding officer, he will report the facts to the next higher commander, who will convene the board. The finding of the board, when approved by the convening authority, shall be final. Discharge without honor on account of "service not honest and faithful" will be given only on the approved finding of a board of officers as herein prescribed.

"When an honorable discharge is given following the action of the board, the fact will be noted on the discharge and on the muster rolls.

"The proceedings of boards convened under this paragraph, showing all the facts pertinent to the inquiry, will be forwarded by the reviewing authority direct to The Military Secretary of the Army."

As has been said, the requirements of the paragraph last above cited are only applicable in determining the character of discharge to be given an enlisted man at the expiration of his term of enlistment. It has never been regarded as restricting the authority vested in the President and the Secretary of War in the fourth article of war.

It would thus appear that the last clause of the fourth article of war vests a discretion in the President to annul an enlistment contract whenever, in his opinion, that course is dictated by the public interest. The English practice, upon which our military administration is to a considerable extent based, is substantially similar to that prescribed in the Articles of War. Clode, in his Military Forces of the Crown, says in speaking of the soldier's enlistment:

"Though an engagement is made for a term certain, the Crown is under no obligation to retain the soldier, either in pay or in arms, for that period, but may discharge him at any time. The safety of the realm may depend in some measure on the immediate discharge or dismissal of any man or regiment in arms, and, equally, that the cause of such dismissal should not at the time be disclosed by the responsible ministers of the Crown."—(II Clode, Military Forces of the Crown, p. 40.)

The provision of a suitable agency for the investigation of charges of wrongdoing on the part of enlisted men, in the operation of which questions of fact may be investigated, findings reached, and, in case of conviction, adequate sentences imposed, restricts the exercise of the power of summary discharge, which is vested in the President in the article above cited, to cases in which the conduct of the soldier and the character of the services rendered can not be investigated by a military tribunal. In the case under discussion it is an essential incident of a judicial investigation that those who are aware of the wrongful acts committed should testify, under oath, as to facts within their knowledge. To defeat such an inquiry, a considerable number of enlisted men have entered into a criminal combination, in the execution of which they decline to disclose facts which are known to them touching the very serious offenses against public order which were committed at Brownsville, Tex., in August last. In that view of the case, the question presented is, Are men who enter into such a combination rendering honest and faithful service within the meaning of their enlistment contracts? In other words, can men admittedly so disregardful of public authority be trusted and relied upon when upon an occasion of public emergency they are called upon to support it?

A court-martial, while a military tribunal, is judicial in character. In proceedings before it there must be charges against individuals, direct and specific, and in trials the same rules of evidence govern as in civil courts. After most careful and exhaustive inquiry in this case, although there was no doubt that soldiers committed the crimes, it was impossible to discover evidence against individuals as a basis for proceedings before a court-martial. It is not a case, therefore, as is pointed out by the Judge-Advocate-General, which can be investigated by a court-martial.

Other distinctions exist between a discharge without honor and a dishonorable discharge, some of which are named by the Judge-Advocate-General in his memorandum in this case, December 8, 1906. Among these is the right of admission to the Soldiers' Home, the right to be buried in a national cemetery, and the right to receive transportation and subsistence. In each of these cases this right exists when enlisted men are discharged without honor though not when they are dishonorably discharged.

This, Mr. President, is the law; this is the practice; these are the precedents. Under them thousands of soldiers, white and black, have been discharged without honor by the Executive. During the past year 352 enlisted men, doubtless including both white and black, were so discharged. The effort here, if successful, will reverse the course of military justice, shield malefactors and criminals, and enable a league of army assassins and murderers to defy public authority and perpetuate itself. Any less authority, Mr. President, than that claimed and exercised in this case would render the Government impotent and place it at the mercy of any criminal faction which might arise in the Army.

Let us now turn from the law to the facts. It is admitted that no individual soldier has been identified as having been engaged in this outrage; so that the inquiry here is limited to whether it was committed by soldiers or civilians.

I have already stated, Mr. President, that prior to August 13 the conduct of some of the soldiers was offensive to the citizens of Brownsville, and a criminal assault had been made upon a lady of the city by a soldier. In addition to this the soldiers were denied equality with whites in some of the saloons of far-away Brownsville; there was a difficulty between a soldier and a customs officer at the crossing of the Rio Grande; and a soldier was struck over the head with a pistol by another customs officer for rude conduct toward the wife of that officer. What resentment, Mr. President, this created in the minds and hearts of the soldiers is well expressed by the colored citizens of Boston and vicinity in a series of resolutions adopted by them at their recent meeting in Faneuil Hall. Hear what they say, as I read from a copy of a paper sent to me by some of them through the mail. They do not deny that soldiers committed the deed, but they give reasons why they did so. They say:

> Brooding on repeated insults and outrages, a few of these colored soldiers went into the town on the night of August 13 last with their guns, determined to do for themselves what the uniform of their country could not do for them and what the police power of white Brownsville would not do for them, viz, protect them from such insults and outrages and punish at the same time the authors of their misery.

There is the resentment, there is the motive, there is the malice, there is the purpose, Mr. President, not only to resent some injustice which may have been done them, but, as stated by their colored friends about Boston and its vicinity, to punish the authors of their misery.

Now, Mr. President, what of the evidence in this case? It has been said that the only evidence is that taken before a committee of citizens of Brownsville, the chairman of which was an ex-Army officer and a Republican. But that is not true, Mr. President. The very report and document from which that testimony was read shows that Major Blocksom, the inspector-general, made inquiry and took the testimony of more than fifty witnesses composed of all classes of people in the city of Brownsville—officials, private citizens, Confederates, Union men, Republicans, Democrats, and not a man, woman, or child in the community doubted the guilt of these ruffians.

It is not customary, Mr. President, for the Inspector-General or any of his assistants in making investigations necessarily to take the testimony in writing. An Army officer was supposed to be a man of honor, at least until these proceedings arose. Something was supposed to be due to his character and that he would not willfully misrepresent facts, which would subject him not only to the criticism and censure of the people, but to trial by court-martial. Why was not that stated?

I have nothing to do with the President personally in this matter. I care nothing about his personality in this case. My personal relations with him, Mr. President, are about as cordial as those of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]; but it ought to have been stated, in all fairness, that the country might know it, that this conscientious American soldier went into Brownsville, talked with the citizens, talked with the officers and soldiers, talked with every class of people, and then upon his honor reported to the President of the United States that the testimony upon this question was without doubt.

But I shall read some of the testimony that was taken by the citizens' committee, and that testimony was taken, Mr. President, in conjunction, I believe, with Major Penrose, the commanding officer of this battalion of soldiers. I wish to read some of it, and I shall print in the RECORD all of the testimony of any single witness from whose testimony I read and not present it detached and garbled. Remember, now, I am on the proposition that soldiers and not civilians committed this act of wanton savagery upon an unsuspecting and sleeping people. Talk about the uniform of the soldier; talk about the honor of the Army; talk about the glory of the flag! Mr. President, the law and public indignation should drive every such scoundrel from the Army, that its record may continue to be such that honorable men can point to it with pride.

Now, let us see. Let us take Mr. George W. Randall. His house is within 60 feet of the garrison, and remember, Mr. President, because I do not want you to get away from that proposition, the question is whether this outrage was committed by soldiers or civilians. That is the point now.

TESTIMONY TAKEN BY CITIZENS' COMMITTEE RELATIVE TO ACTION OF UNITED STATES TROOPS ON THE NIGHT OF AUGUST 13 AND MORNING OF AUGUST 14, 1906.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 14, 1906.

Mr. George W. Randall takes the stand.

Q. Tell what you saw from the time your attention was first attracted.—A. Well, I was sleeping about 10 o'clock and was woke up by pistol shots fired close to my house, about 60 feet from garrison, inside of garrison wall. I got up and went to the window, my wife with me. We could see men moving back and forth inside the garrison wall, and they were shooting. One man in particular. I watched the shots, seeing the fire leave the pistol, and it was elevated up in the air and was being fired about as fast as a man can move his finger. There were other shots, but I did not notice them.

Q. What time was that?—A. About 10 o'clock, I think; though I did not strike a light to look. The next move that I saw and what I heard was one word—there was a good deal of talking, but very low—one man said "There he goes," and they made a move for the wall and passed out of my sight.

Q. Did they have guns in their hands?—A. I could not tell.

Q. Were they soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. You could see on the town side of the garrison wall?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any shooting on the town side of the garrison wall toward the garrison at the time of the firing?—A. No.

Q. Then all the shooting you saw was from the inside of the garrison?—A. The shooting I saw—and that was through the flash of the pistol, and every one of those flashes was elevated—did not seem to be shooting at anything.

Q. When you saw the flashes of fire could you tell in what direction such fire was?—A. It was elevated.

Q. Was it toward town or away from town?—A. Toward town.

Q. How long did that shooting continue?—A. I do not think it was more than five or six minutes.

Q. Were there other shots fired from the post also later?—A. (Not known.) The first shot came from the garrison wall down below; the next one passed through my room and went directly over my bed.

Q. How long was that after the first shot was fired?—A. Five or six minutes.

Q. That last shot that went through your house, judging from the direction of the shot, would you suppose it was fired by somebody who ran out of town through the alley?—A. No; it could not have been. My house stands [motioned toward the fort], and the place where it went into my house [motioned again] and the place where it went out [another motion] was about 6 inches above where it went in. (Stenographer can't comprehend motions.)

Q. After the first shot was fired, how long was it until you heard the last shot?—A. I could not tell. My wife said it was between a half and three-quarters of an hour, but I think it was not that long.

Q. The shot that came through your house came from the direction of the garrison?—A. Yes; about the lower end of the lower quarters.

Q. That was several minutes after the first fire?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember whether it was before or after the bugle call was sounded?—A. It was after; a long time after. The first bugle call that I heard—it was a peculiar call—was two or three minutes after they left the quarters and jumped the wall and started this way.

Q. It was after the bugle call?—A. Yes; and it was quite a little while before that man got the squad together and came up Elizabeth.

Q. There were two bugle calls?—A. Yes.

Q. Was this after the first or second bugle call?—A. The last.

Q. Did you see anything of the placing of a Gatling gun in the gate last night?—A. No.

Q. You were in view of the gate all the time?—A. Yes.

Q. You could have seen it?—A. Yes. [Continued.] The first shots that I heard seemed to me as though they were a little to the left. When I got up and went to the window I saw that they were shooting up.

(Excused.)

Mr. O. J. Matlock takes the stand.

Q. (By chairman.) This committee is engaged in investigating what occurred last night. It has been stated that some soldier addressed you and told you that it would be dangerous for you to go up the street after 10 o'clock.—A. No; no one addressed me that way. The only conversation that I had was with the commander of Company B (I think it was), and he said that his instructions were to keep his men in at night, and that he was going to call them back. I had no talk with a soldier, and knew nothing of it, except that there was a little strange situation on account of the affair Sunday night.

Q. Where were you during this shooting?—A. Behind the guardhouse, at Mrs. Johnson's house.

Q. Did you see anybody do any shooting?—A. No. I went up to the guardhouse to see what was the matter. They said they did not know, and came near running their bayonets into me, they were so excited. They said they knew nothing about it.

Q. Do you know anything about the roll call there last night?—A. No.

Q. Anything about the guns?—A. No; except what I have heard.

Q. Did you make the statement that the guns have not been returned to the racks yet?—A. No; for I don't know anything about it. I had a talk with some of the officers this morning, and they told me that the guns had not been tampered with. They had an idea that the guns could not be gotten hold of except for drill purposes.

Q. Is that still their idea?—A. No; I think not.

Q. How long would it take a man to go from the officers' quarters over to the men's quarters?—A. They were in bed, and, having to dress, it would take maybe eight minutes to get their clothes on and get over there. Maybe all of eight minutes.

Q. Do you know anything that might be of the slightest help to this committee?—A. No; nobody out there knows anything about it. The general opinion is that they will never know anything about it as long as they stay here, unless one of them gets full and tells it.

Q. Did you state that you were told not to go out that night?—A. Yes; I was washing my hands when the shooting commenced, and I went up there, and they were very excited and told me I had better get back into the house or I might get hurt.

Q. That was while the shooting was going on?—A. Yes; I started to go, and they said, "Don't go yet awhile." So I waited.

Q. Was the officer of the guard there?—A. There is no officer of the guard, except the noncommissioned officer. He was on his round. I heard him make his round about 11 o'clock.

Q. If there was a guard on last night, did not he know anybody who went into or out of the post?—A. No; he might be around the barracks, and a person could come in the gate.

Q. But if they had a special patrol? With that they should be able to keep people out?

(Answer not known.)

Q. I understand there was one man with each squad who has entire charge of the arms and ammunition. If any arms or ammunition went out of there or went in, he was bound to know?—A. He ought to know it, if he was up all night. If he was in bed, he might be misled.

Q. These arms are under lock and key, and this party has charge of the key?—A. Yes.

Q. And he should be responsible?—A. Yes.

Q. A guard who would be up at the end of the third quarters, it would be an easy matter for any number of men to jump the fence before he could get back and see who they were?—A. Yes. It is about 500 yards.

Q. What Gatling gun is there in the fort?—A. There is only one, but it was not got out.

(Mr. KELLY stated:) It was a very old gun—one of the guns that was on the old Bravo in 1872.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Jose Martinez testified before the committee:

Q. You know the object of this committee. Just state what you know or what you saw.

(Question of speaking English raised. Interpreter dispensed with.)

Q. Where were you last night?—A. In my room in Mr. Randall's house, right behind the telegraph office [pointed out place on map]. On alley fronting the post in block 61.

Q. Were you there last night?—A. Yes; I was reading the paper when I heard four shots.

Q. What kind of shots; pistol or rifle?—A. Gunshots.

Q. Where were they?—A. Inside the quarters. I hear the noise like somebody—big crowd—jump the fence.

Q. About how many?—A. I could not see him; I hear.

Q. Well, more or less?—A. About 20.

Q. Did they have guns in their hands?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they negroes or white men?—A. Negroes.

Q. Did you see their uniforms?—A. No; I saw their—what you call it?—bulk. I could see them shooting this way [makes motion at hips]. I could hear men come up Elizabeth street and other men go down the alley.

Q. How many shots did you hear, more or less?—A. I could not tell; about forty or fifty.

Q. Was that before or after the first bugle call? Did you hear the bugle call?—A. Yes.

Q. Did these men come over before or after?—A. They shot and then the bugle.

Q. Then you heard other shots?—A. Yes.

Q. Then a second bugle call?—A. Yes.

Q. How long was it between the two bugle calls?—A. I think it was about three minutes.

Q. Did you hear them call a roll on the other side?—A. No; I was sleeping by that time.

Q. Could you hear these soldiers talking any?—A. Yes.

Q. What did they say?—A. I did not pay any attention to them.

Q. Do you remember anything they said?—A. No.

Q. Did they curse?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they drunk or not?—A. I could not tell you.

Q. Did you see said men [Kibbe's question] go back?—A. No.

Q. Can you show us on the map where the first crossed the wall?—A. (Goes to map and points.) They jumped over the wall all along.

Q. Did they have guns in their hands?—A. Yes. I was standing in the door.

Q. Were they inside or outside the wall when the first shots were fired?—A. Inside.

Q. Then they jumped over the wall and ran uptown?—A. Yes.

Q. All of them with guns?—A. Most of them I saw with guns.

Q. Some of them ran straight up the alley. Do you know whether any of them ran up Washington street?—A. I don't know. I blow out my light.

Q. Have you any idea how many men crossed that wall?—A. I saw about twenty men. I don't know how many of them jumped the wall.

Q. Did you see the soldiers when they came back to the garrison?—A. No.

Q. Did you see any of them come up Elizabeth street?—A. I could not see them; I hear them come up Elizabeth.

Q. Did you hear any shots from the town side before you heard them on the inside?—A. No.

Q. You live about 30 feet from the garrison wall?—A. Yes. (Some one ventured the information that it is just 36 feet.)

Q. Were these four shots that you heard first all the shooting that took place until they passed your house?—A. No; when they jumped the fence they commenced shooting.

Q. Which way were they shooting?—A. This way.

Q. The guns were shooting straight?—A. Yes. Maybe some of them were elevated.

Q. That is all you know about it?—A. That is all.

Q. There were quite a number of shots fired before the first bugle?—A. Four.

Q. Were there not more shots than that before the first bugle call?—A. No.

Q. They continued until the second bugle call?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there any after the second bugle call?—A. Yes; lots of them.

(Excused.)

Mr. President, there follows the testimony of a number of witnesses. I shall print it all, but I wish to read the salient features of it to the Senate to-day. Here is a man, Baker, who climbed up on a tank so that he could see beyond the wall of the garrison. What does he say? Baker is the man who had had trouble with a soldier at the crossing of the Rio Grande.

Mr. A. Baker called to stand.

Q. Just tell what you know.—A. I heard shooting during the night; don't know exactly what hour.

Q. Was it a pistol or rifle?—A. It sounded like a pistol. I jumped up and my brother came out and asked what it was. We climbed up on a tank and looked over into the fort. The shooting commenced. There were four or five shots near the wall. Then they commenced shooting uptown.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Near the old ice plant, in lot 9, block 59, I think.

Q. Did you see the men cross the wall?—A. No.

Q. Do you remember hearing a bugle call?—A. Yes.

Q. Was the firing before or after the bugle call?—A. There were some shots before the bugle call; then the bugle; then more shots; then the bugle call; then more shots. I heard the men run down the stairs, like they were coming to a fire, and some one hollered, "Fall in line," and then, "March," and they went uptown.

Q. Did you hear the roll call?—A. Yes; about half an hour after they got back—a half or three-quarters of an hour after the firing ceased and they went back to the post.

Q. From where you were, could you look down in the alley?—A. Yes.

Q. At the time of the firing, or within five minutes after the firing, did you see anyone running through the alley?—A. No.

Q. Were you expecting trouble last night?—A. Yes. Yesterday evening, about 6 o'clock, two soldiers came up to the house and asked if Mr. Baker lived there. Then they said they wanted a big, broad-shouldered fellow, who said he was from Georgia. So we got our arms and guarded our residence.

Q. Do you know of the shot that Mr. Randall spoke of having gone through his room?—A. Yes; I heard it whistle.

Q. Did you notice the flash of any guns toward the fort?—A. No.

Q. If they had had a roll call you could have heard it?—A. Yes; I heard the last one and heard nearly every name called.

Q. Why were you noticing this?—A. After they had the other trouble the officer told him to report to him and that he would have a roll call and get who was out. So I noticed for the roll call this time.

Q. Did you hear the shooting up in town?—A. Yes.

Q. How many shots did you hear?—A. One hundred and fifty, maybe two hundred. It looked like volleys of them were being fired.

(Excused.)

Mr. A. C. Moore testified:

Q. This committee is sitting for the purpose of getting information that will place the saddle on the right horse. You are running the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes.

Q. Are there any bullet holes in the hotel?—A. Yes; about six.

Q. Shot by whom?—A. By people; last night.

Q. What time?—A. About 12.

Q. Did you see anyone shoot?—A. No.

Q. Did you hear?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell what you know.—A. The first shooting started down by the garrison. The shooting still continued, and they came up the alley right by our rooms. They gave the command here and fired. Then they came out on Elizabeth street. There they gave the same command again—"Halt; fire!"

Q. Could you tell who they were—negroes or white people?—A. Well, it was a good, strong voice and English spoken.

Q. Could you see them?—A. No; I could not leave my wife; she was in hysterics.

Q. You heard those commands?—A. Yes; and heard them say, "There goes the son of a bitch," and something else, "Get him!"

Q. Could you say whether it was a negro's voice?—A. I think it was. It was very coarse.

Q. After the command what did they do?—A. Well, they ran on down, and there was a shot or two fired then.

Q. Toward the corner of Thirteenth and the hotel?—A. Yes. Then they gave another command. The best that I could locate it was from this corner opposite the hotel. Then they fired, and must have fired that volley at the hotel, for there are the bullet holes showing that they must have been shot from that corner. One of them passed through a window facing and through a door and struck the wall.

Q. Have you got any of those bullets?—A. Yes; I gave them to Fred. Combe.

Q. What were they?—A. Steel jackets.

Q. How many shots did you hear?—A. About fifty.

Q. Where did they shoot the policeman—right here [pointing out of window of Wells's office]?—A. I do not know, but they were bound to have shot him when they came out of the alley, for then they hollowed, "There goes the son of a bitch; get him!" Then I picked up a lot of bullets [meaning cartridges, evidently] in the alley, empty and loaded.

Q. What were they?—A. 1205, new army gun, Springfield model.

Q. That is all you know?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether or not any of your guests actually saw the negro soldiers?—A. Yes; Mr. Borden and Mr. Chase had their heads out of the window and saw the squad of five or six. They shot just about then, and the bullets hit right close to the window. One bullet came through the screen, and when it hit the window went straight up.

(Excused.)

Mr. Canada testified:

Q. We are inquiring into the matter of last night with a view to ascertaining who the guilty parties are. We know they were negro soldiers. If there is anything that would throw any light on the subject we would like to have it.—A. I did not see a single man that I am sure. My room is up on third floor. As soon as the shooting began I went down on second floor and went out on the gallery. I saw that policeman and saw that the horse was wounded. He staggered and fell. I could tell by his rather dark clothes that he was an officer.

Q. Could you see who fired the shots?—A. No; I could not give any description of the men. I could hear the peculiar click of the gun, and I would swear it was a rifle.

Q. Could you tell whether it was an ordinary rifle or a Krag?—A. They were the same as the shots fired in the alley.

Q. You could not hear them say anything?—A. Perhaps, if I had been listening for that purpose alone.

Q. How many shots were fired from the corner at the horse?—A. At least three.

Q. How many in all did you hear?—A. Not less than 150; perhaps 200. Between those two numbers. It is more or less a guess.

Q. Did you hear any commands? Hear "Fire," or anything that way?—A. The only thing I heard them say was, "We got him," when the horse fell.

Q. Did you see or hear anything that would lead you to believe that they were negro soldiers?—A. Nothing except the general tenor of the affair.

Q. The next firing was up the street?—A. Yes; they went on up the street firing.

Q. From the tone of the voice that you heard make the remark, "We got him," were they Americans or Mexicans?—A. I think they were negroes. I was raised among them and knew their voices pretty well.

(Excused.)

* * * * * * *

Doctor Combe states what Mr. Odin, who is now out of the city, said in regard to the shooting (made in presence of Judge John Bartlett):

That about the middle of the night of August 13 he was standing at a window of his room in the Miller Hotel and he heard a squad of men coming down the alley; that they arrived at the corner of the alley and he recognized that they were five negro soldiers; that when they arrived at the intersection of Thirteenth street and this alley one, apparently in command, gave the order, "There he goes; shoot him." That immediately a volley was fired, and then one of the men leveled his piece at the window and fired, the bullet passing through the casing and going into the ceiling directly over his head. One of his children fell to the floor and he thought it was shot. His wife was present at the window.

(Judge Barlett affirmed statement.)

Mr. McDonald testified:

Q. We are here to get what information we can that will throw light on the circumstance.—A. I board on the little block next the garrison, about the middle. I knew there was bitter feeling in town and thought that if they caught any negro soldiers up town they might to [sic] them up. So I laid awake; never pulled off my shoes. When the first fire started I jumped up. There were from six to ten shots on Elizabeth street; then they ceased. I went down the street to the next block and on to the alley, and stopped on the corner. The shooting commenced again just inside the garrison wall. Then I saw some men assembled by the garrison wall near the telegraph office. There were about twenty men. I don't know where they came from; did not see them scale the wall or come through the gate. I think they were in trousers and shirts. I don't know whether they were negroes or white men, but they were United States soldiers. They went into the alley where I first stopped (I had moved back) and commenced shooting. I was thirty or forty steps from them. Five or six men went up that alley, and I could see their guns distinctly. I did not hear any roll call, but I went home soon after that and then came down town.

Doctor Thorne called.

Q. Tell the committee what you know.—A. I know nothing except what I heard. I heard the firing when it commenced, and supposed there was a rampage. I was in bed. There was only a thin wall between me and the alley. I heard one man say, "There he goes," or "There they go," or "There he is;" then another spoke in a loud voice, "Give them or him hell," and louder still, "God damn him." It was a negro's voice. Three bullets went into my house. I did not hear them go back down that alley, for I got up and went down town.

(Excused.)

Mr. Herbert Elkins testified:

Q. You know the object of this meeting. We know that this outrage was committed by negro soldiers. We want any information that will lead to a discovery of whoever did it.—A. About fifteen minutes before the shooting came up I went up to my room in the Lahay Hotel, second story back. When the shooting commenced I got up and sat in the window. They came up the street; two of them seemed to be in the lead. There were five or six. I could swear they were negro soldiers. They emptied their guns into Mr. Cowen's house and then split up, and part of them went up Elizabeth street. One of them got into a mudhole and hollered for the others to go around the other way. They wore khaki pants, regulation blue shirts, and belts. The two in advance were small black negroes, none of them over 5 feet 6. I might recognize the voice of the one that got into the mudhole, and think I could recognize him, but maybe I could not pick him out. They did not turn back when the bugle call sounded, but went on, and in a little while they came back. I saw them shoot into Mr. Cowen's house once, and I think they shot into it three times. They got back to the barracks before the roll call and I think before the squad went out in town. When the squad went back I was standing with Mrs. Lahay at her front gate, and the squad passed within a few feet of us. One little black negro, who I took to be the same one that got into the mudhole when they were shooting into Mrs. Cowen's house, said, "We'll kill the rest of the sons of bitches to-morrow." I heard the policeman shoot uptown; could tell it because the shots were dull.

(Excused.)

Macedonio Ramirez called to stand. (Policeman on duty that night.)

Q. You were with Joe Dominguez?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the shooting?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the soldiers?—A. Yes.

Q. How many?—A. Five or six.

Q. Where were you?—A. When the first shots were fired I was standing at the corner of the Alamo alley. When I heard the shots I ran to the next corner. I then ran down Washington street until I reached Mr. Bolack's corner. When I reached Bolack's corner I met the lieutenant police and Padron coming from the direction of the garrison. I asked the lieutenant police what was up. He said he did not know. He supposed the soldiers were firing. As we turned the corner—the lieutenant police was ahead, Padron was behind him, and I was behind Padron—we heard one or two shots from the corner of the hotel. As we came near the alley we heard the locks of the guns that they were loading. When we were in front of Mr. Wells's office five or six soldiers appeared at the corner of the alley. One of them said, "Here he goes; shoot him," and three or four shot at Domingo, and one of them remarked, "Give it to him." None of us shot. Padron went up Washington street and I went up Thirteenth street. When I reached the house where Mr. Carson keeps they shot my hat off. I heard them shoot in the direction in which the other policeman ran. I ran up that way and came back down on Elizabeth street and intercepted the company. I was standing on Crichell's sidewalk; the company was in the middle of the street, and Marcellus was on the opposite side of the street. One of the men called the attention of the captain to the fact that there was a man in the street with a gun in his hand. Marcellus Daugherty stated that he was an officer of the law. He ordered them to march, and they stood still. Then he ordered them the second time, and they marched. Some of the men had their guns on their shoulders and some of them carried their guns in their hands. They were talking and seemed to be in a bad humor. They said something to their captain when he ordered them to march, and he ordered them a second time, and they marched on. They had stopped and said, "There is a man with a gun in his hand."

GENARO PADRON'S TESTIMONY.

My name is Genaro Padron. City policeman of the city of Brownsville. On the night of the 13th instant about 12 o'clock I was at the corner of the Merchants' National Bank, when I first heard some shots in the direction of the garrison. It was in the direction of Fort Brown. I was then starting up Elizabeth street with Florencio Briseño; ran very fast toward the garrison, and then as I was passing Mr. Tillman's saloon I asked him if he had a gun, and he said that he had only a .45 caliber, which I took. I ran in the same direction, up the street with Briseño, turned the other street, and went near the corner of Bolack's house, and then went up his side of the house and turned the corner and went into the Pecina's yard. Before that I had met Lieutenant Policeman Ygnacio Dominguez, who was then in front of me. I then came next, and Macedonio Ramirez was behind me. I told him "You had better not cross that alley, for the soldiers are firing from in there," and he then crossed the alley and was looking in the direction I had told him the soldiers were, and at that moment they came out and opened fire on Dominguez. As I said before, I was behind Dominguez and Macedonio Ramirez was behind me. I could hear the soldiers were talking. I then came around the corner and looked about, but I did not see anybody. I then saw the lieutenant police, Dominguez, cross the alley and Macedonio and myself coming right behind. After the lieutenant policeman, Dominguez, had gone across I could see the flashes of the guns giving the reflection on the glass windows of the opposite building. And then I saw the lieutenant police, Dominguez, go in a walk on his horse crossing the alley, when I then heard a soldier say: "There he goes." I then backed a little, but I could never see Macedonio Ramirez after that. I was trying all the time to find out where he had gone. When the soldiers came out of the alley they turned their guns and fired. There must have been three or four of them Then about three more came out at the corner of Bolack's house out into the street and fired on Dominguez. After that I backed and fired my pistol at them, and then they fired on me. At that time I turned toward the Sahualla's store, Washington street, and saw that they were about seven or eight soldiers, armed with rifles, going in the middle of the street, and I then took said Washington street, hiding and walking in the dark, taking behind the trees that are on the sidewalk, and then they fired another volley. When I got near a big nogul (walnut) tree they recognized me, and they fired again at me, but I kept backing and backing every time until I got to the corner of Sahualla's store, but I keeping in the shadow all the time, taking the sidewalk of Nicolas Lopez's store, then turned around toward Miguel Fernandez's store, when at that time I heard some one speaking, who asked me what it was, and I looked over my head and saw it was somebody, and I then told him that the soldiers had broken out of the post, firing upon the police force. I then went up to the corner of the First National Bank, turned there, and went toward the Merchants' National Bank and got behind a thick post—the thickest one that was around there. I then heard that some one was knocking at the door of McDonald's store and went in that direction and asked him, "Who is that?" And he replied, "It's the mayor, Federico Combe," and we then walked up the street toward the Merchants' National Bank, and I then told him that the soldiers had broken out of the garrison, and perhaps Lieutenant Police Ygnacio Dominguez was hurt, as I had left him some few moments before. I did not know where he was. We then came in the same direction of the street. By that time people were congregating on the street near Tillman's saloon, and somebody said there is a dead man in there. Then the mayor went in and told me to keep guard at the door and not to let anyone pass unless he was a peace officer. I then said, "Two more policemen are missing, José Coronado and Florencio Briseño." Both of them were not there. Yes, sir; I know they were soldiers, because they were in their uniforms. This talking I heard near the alley of Bolack's was just opposite the door of Bolack's, the big entrance door, about the third door from the alley corner, I think. Yes; I heard voices say, "There he goes; shoot him." Then it was when they fired on Lieutenant Police Dominguez. That is all.

That, as I will print it in the RECORD, is from the testimony taken before the committee of which Capt. William Kelly was chairman.

Now let us see if there is any testimony of the negro soldiers themselves that will throw light upon this question. Artificer George Newton, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, testified before Lieutenant-Colonel Lovering:

ARTIFICER GEORGE NEWTON, COMPANY D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Q. Where were you on August 13 when the shooting commenced at Brownsville?—A. I was in my bed asleep, in quarters; in barracks.

Q. Anybody in Brownsville ever abuse you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been in a saloon in Brownsville?—A. I went in a Mexican's place there.

Q. Ever in a white man's saloon?—A. The first night I got there I was in one, the name of Mr. Taylor, I believe; some of the Twenty-sixth fellows carried me in there and gave me a glass of beer.

Q. White men in the saloon?—A. Yes, sir. He invited us back. I never had opportunity; was a carpenter.

Q. Did they have a separate bar for colored men in the saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you object to that?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long have you been in the service?—A. When I complete this enlistment I will be started on my tenth year. There was nothing said about these three fellows of the Twenty-sixth taking me in and giving me a drink. The gentleman took me out to a place where he was going to open a restaurant for our boys—for colored men.

Q. Did you object to that?—A. No, sir; because in place where I was raised they have them that way; kind of garden like in rear of building.

Q. Did you ever talk with any of the men on the subject of having a separate bar?—A. No, sir; I did not have but a very little said to me anyway. Went to a drug store to get some pills, I believe it was, and to get some writing-paper tablet.

Did the white soldiers of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, displaced by the negroes, at Fort Brown, believe there was any trouble brewing on account of sending this particular battalion of troops to Brownsville? Here is the testimony of one of the soldiers, the artificer, Newton, who continues in his testimony:

Wanted to know where we were from, and I told him; he said, "You boys is the nicest set of boys I ever met. We have learned from the boys of the Twenty-sixth that you were going to be awfully rough here. You are the nicest set of fellows I ever met."

Q. Did you buy anything at this drug store?—A. I bought some pills and a tablet, I believe it was.

Q. Did they object to selling to you?—A. No, sir. The first drug store I went to I walked in, and nobody said anything to me. Some gentlemen in there talking. I stood around for a few minutes; nobody said anything; didn't ask me what I wanted or anything, so I walked out. They didn't say anything to me nor did I to them.

That is the statement from one of the soldiers that it had been reported by the "boys of the Twenty-sixth," a white regiment, that the men of this battalion would be pretty rough at Brownsville. The soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry had been pretty rough elsewhere, as you will remember, at Fort Bliss in Texas and at some place in Nebraska.

Here is the testimony of Jacob Frazier, first sergeant Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry. Does he believe that negro soldiers committed this offense? I think so. I will read a paragraph from his affidavit taken before Captain Lyon:

FORT BROWN, State of Texas, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, one Jacob Frazier, a first sergeant of Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

"About 12 o'clock midnight, August 13, 1906, I was asleep in my house, which is situated about 100 yards east of the east set of soldiers' quarters. I was awakened by two shots being fired from the road in rear of B Company quarters, as near as I can judge. My first impression was that it was the alarm of fire. I immediately got on some clothes and started to run for the company. Then a fusilade of shots was fired from along this road, and the call to arms was sounded. When I was passing in front of Company C quarters I distinctly heard some one shout 'Cease firing,' several times, and it seemed to come from the road in rear of barracks. When the fusilade of shots started and the call went, I thought the post was being shot up by the civilians of Brownsville. When I reached barracks the men were coming out with their guns, and I fell in the company and checked them, using a lantern. Two men were absent on pass, Corpl. C. H. Hawkins and Private Walter Johnson. When the company was formed Captain Lyon took command and took up a position along the wall in rear of the barracks. Then we patrolled through town and returned to the post. I do not know who did the firing. I would not believe that the soldiers had anything to do with it until I was told that Government ammunition was found the next morning. I do not believe that any member of D Company was implicated in the affair. I know of nothing that could have caused or that would warrant this firing.

"JACOB FRAZIER,
"First Sergeant Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry."

Subscribed and sworn to before me at Fort Brown, Tex., this 21st day of August, 1906.

SAMUEL P. LYON,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Trial Officer, Summary Court.

Here is the testimony of the cook of Company D, by name Charles Dade. What does he say?

FORT BROWN, State of Texas, ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, one Charles Dade, a cook of Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

"About 12 o'clock midnight August 13, 1906, I was asleep in a house which I had rented for my wife and family, situated directly across the street from the kitchen door of barracks. I was awakened by my wife, who said there was some firing going on outside. I went out and saw there was no shooting near my house, so brought my family across the road to barracks. Just as I reached the wall in rear of barracks the call 'to arms' was sounded. The firing continued while I was crossing the road and after I had crossed. I did not see any flashes from guns, nor do I know what kind of firearm was being used. There was no firing in the road in rear of D Company quarters; it came from the vicinity of the post gate and the telegraph office, it seemed to me. After I had reached barracks I remained in the kitchen. I do not know who did the firing, nor do I know what could have caused it.

"Further deponent saith not.

"CHARLES DADE,
"Cook, Company D, Twenty-fifth Infantry."

Subscribed and sworn to before me at Fort Reno, Okla., this 4th day of September, 1906.

SAMUEL P. LYON.
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Trial Officer, Summary Court.

I next call attention to what Colonel Lovering, of the Inspector-General's office, born in Vermont and appointed from New Hampshire, says that Cook Dade's testimony shows:

Cook Dade's affidavit shows that a man could have taken part in the shooting and returned to his company undetected.

Mr. President, what do the Army officers say who investigated this question? I said at the outset that every Army officer who had investigated it—I do not care whether he is from Georgia or South Carolina or Ohio or Vermont or New Hampshire—reports to the President upon his honor as a soldier that there is no reasonable doubt of the guilt of these soldiers. Here is Major Penrose, who commanded the battalion, from Dakota, I believe. He says:

Were it not for the damaging evidence of the empty shells and used clips I should be of the firm belief that none of my men was in any way connected with the crime, but with this fact so painfully before me I am not only convinced it was perpetrated by men of this command, but that it was carefully planned beforehand.

The next day Major Penrose telegraphed to The Military Secretary at Washington.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 16, 1906.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.:

Reference your telegram yesterday, a shooting occurred in Brownsville about 12.10 morning of 14th, in which one civilian was killed and the chief of police wounded in right arm, which had to be amputated. Believe shooting was done by enlisted men of this post, but have not as yet been able to detect guilty party.

Here is an extract from the report of Major Blocksom, which I will not stop to read, because I dare say Senators are familiar with it, but I will print what he says upon the subject:

From the evidence obtainable I believe the first shots were fired between B Company barracks and the wall separating post from town. A number were fired into the air for the purpose of creating an alarm. The soldiers, nine to fifteen, possibly more, then jumped the wall and started through town. There is no reliable evidence to support the claim that the first shots came from town, and no bullet marks were found on barracks. From their direction, etc., I am sure three shots through Mr. Yturria's house came from a point near the center of B Company's upper back porch. A Mexican boy sleeping on the floor of the Yturria porch said they were among the first fired.

Mr. Randall lives near the telegraph office opposite post gate. A bullet went through his sitting room; it came from a point near the wall opposite southwestern end of C Company barracks. Some of the first shots fired also came from the vicinity of D Company barracks. The line of barracks of D, B, and C Companies runs northeast to southwest. The wall between post and town is parallel to and about 75 feet northwest of line of barracks. An alley through town, perpendicular to wall, beginning at a point nearly opposite space between B and D Company barracks, was the line of operations (about three blocks in length).

The raiders first struck Cowan's house (at end of first block). There were two women and five children in it. It is a miracle some of them were not shot. The raiders could not help knowing they had not yet gone to bed. About ten shots were fired, nearly all going through house at a height of 4½ feet or less above floor. One shot put out the lamp sitting on a table. Mrs. Cowan has been on the verge of hysterics ever since. In is said the Cowan children had made fun of "the nigger soldiers;" but I could not pin down the reports. There must be some truth in them. The lieutenant of police, Dominguez, heard the firing and rode toward it, accompanied by two policemen. Near the corner of Miller Hotel (end of second block) the two policemen turned back, but Dominguez kept on, and the raiders started firing upon him. He said there were about fifteen colored soldiers in the party. He was mounted on a white horse, and went half a block after reaching corner of hotel, when his horse fell dead, shot through the body several times. The raiders were probably at the corner and continued firing on the fleeing man until horse fell. Dominguez was shot in right arm (afterwards amputated below the elbow). He did not even draw his revolver from holster. A number of shots were also fired at the other two policemen. Dominguez, many years on the police force, is universally respected. The raiders fired seven or eight times into the Miller Hotel, including several shots at a guest sitting by a window. After shooting Dominguez they divided. One party proceeded along the alley. Frank Natus, bartender in Tillman's saloon (about two-thirds the way down third block), heard them coming and started to close the back door, but was shot and probably instantly killed about 20 feet from door. A Mexican in the saloon, Preciado by name, was slightly wounded in the hand by a bullet which passed through his coat. Natus had never had any trouble with the soldiers, as far as known. Five or six shots were fired through that back door. This party tried to get into the back door of another saloon, but it was closed.

The other party went half a block to the right, then turned to the left and fired five or six shots into Mr. Starck's house (second from corner on street parallel to alley), evidently mistaking it for Tate's (which is third). Bullet marks in Starck's house are higher than in Cowan's. Mrs. Starck said two shots went through mosquito bar over bed in which she and two children were sleeping. These were the last attacks, and raiders then probably ran back. Bullet marks were found on several other houses in vicinity of those already mentioned.

None of the individual raiders was recognized. Streets are poorly lighted, and it was a dark night. Those who saw them were busy trying to keep out of sight themselves. The soldiers were comparative strangers in town, having arrived only two weeks before. That the raiders were soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry can not be doubted. The evidence of many witnesses of all classes is conclusive. Shattered bullets, shells, and clips found are merely corroborative.

Though Senators have read the report, I wish to read just here the basis of Major Blocksom's report in this case:

I examined privately the five officers present when trouble occurred (Major Penrose, Captains Lyon and Macklin, Lieutenants Grier and Lawrason, all of Twenty-fifth Infantry), all men who made affidavits, etc., A" to F" (as well as post noncommissioned staff, a number of old noncommissioned officers in each company, etc.), all important witnesses in A''' to B''', Mayor Combe, Mr. Dominguez, Mr. and Mrs. Evans, etc. I interviewed nearly all prominent officials—Federal, State, and county—saloon keepers, and other citizens of all classes. I examined the houses, interviewing inmates, of Messrs. Cowen, Randall, Starck, and Yturria, observing where shots entered and left; also saloon where bartender was killed and a number of other buildings having bullet marks.

What does General Garlington, Inspector-General of the Army, say?

It has been established, by careful investigation, beyond reasonable doubt that the firing into the houses of the citizens of Brownsville, while the inhabitants thereof were pursuing their peaceful vocation or sleeping, and by which one citizen was killed and the chief of police so seriously wounded that he lost an arm, was done by enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry belonging to the battalion stationed at Fort Brown.

The General Staff of the Army, in a paper prepared by Gen. Thomas H. Barry, takes the positon that the soldiers committed this offense, and recommends that a court-martial shall try Major Penrose and Captain Macklin for neglect of duty in allowing it to be done.

Now, what about Captain Macklin? You will remember, at least, some Senators who have read the testimony will, that Macklin commands C Company, and that with one exception all of the men who had trouble with the citizens of Brownsville belonged to that company. What does Macklin think about it? Does he think the people of Brownsville committed the outrage? Does he believe that there was an organized riot in Brownsville by which women and children might be killed in order to secure the removal of the troops from that place? He does not believe it. Macklin has not made a report on this subject, so far as I am advised, but here is a statement by Gilchrist Stewart as to what Macklin thinks:

Captain Macklin [is] the only officer whom I found so intensely confident that the men knew about it and that the soldiers did the firing.

He is not only confident, but intensely so.

There has been a great deal said about a roll call after the shooting. Let us see about it. Here is the testimony of Captain Lyon, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. He says:

The first sergeant with a lantern, and myself, went down the line and saw that every man was present—that is, that a man answered the name of every man.

The idea of testing the presence of conspirators by such a method as that, testing the presence of men who had committed a crime diabolical and inhuman; whether or not they would get somebody in the ranks to answer for them. That is Company D.

What does Lieutenant Grier, who commanded Company C that night and ordered the roll call of that company, say?

LIEUT. HARRY S. GRIER, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Q. Where were you on August 13, 1906, when the shooting commenced at Brownsville?—A. Asleep in my quarters.
Q. On what duty were you?—A. Post quartermaster and commissary; also acting post adjutant.
Q. Who were the first enlisted men that you saw?—A. Sergeant Harley, acting first sergeant Company C.
Q. Was this before the firing ceased or after?—A. Before the firing ceased.
Q. Do you remember any other particular name that you saw before the firing ceased?—A. No, sir; by the time I got over to the barracks the firing stopped. I met Sergeant Harley on the brick walk coming from the men's barracks to the officers' line about three-quarters of the way across the parade ground to the officers' line; that is, near the officers' line. I halted him, not knowing who it was (firing was still going on), and inquired who was there. Replied, "Sergeant Harley." I said, "Sergeant, what is the trouble over there?" He said, "The men say somebody in town is shooting up the barracks." I said to him, "If that is the case, what are you doing over here?" He said, "I am going to get the captain."

So here is Company C, in which were all the men but one who had trouble with the people of Brownsville, answering a roll call, such as it was, after the firing had ceased in the town.

There is something more about a roll call. I read from a paper filed in this case by Major Blocksom, dated December 6, 1906. He says:

Major Penrose says he thought the firing had all ceased when the rolls were called. (See p. 1 [94], sworn testimony, Colonel Lovering's report.) Captain Lyon's testimony plainly shows that the main shooting was over when rolls were called and that scattering shots afterwards came from frightened people in town shooting out of their windows. (See p. 3 [96], same sworn testimony.) Lieutenant Grier's statements (pp. 5 and 6 [p. 97], same testimony) and Acting First Sergeant Harley's (pp. 6 and 7 [p. 98]) plainly show that firing had entirely ceased before roll of C Company was called, and that the roll call itself was not at all accurate.

Not only that, but I want to ask if all the men, according to the roll call even, were accounted for. Major Blocksom also says in the paper referred to:

By consulting the list of men absent from company quarters (p. 2 [93] of Colonel Lovering's report) and the sworn testimony of the men themselves (on pages indicated), it will be seen that the following were absent from roll calls that night: Three in Brownsville on pass, one in Brownsville presumably without a pass, and from eight to ten at quartermaster corral, bakery, officers' quarters, and quarters in town—twelve to fourteen in all.

This is about as many men as some of the witnesses say engaged in this infamous assault upon the people of Brownsville.

Mr. President, what was done, in the next place, to verify the number of rifles that were there after the shooting? What was done to discover whether those rifles had been freshly discharged? This assault occurred at 12 o'clock on the night of the 13th. Let us see what precautions were taken:

Major Blocksom further says:

No rifles were examined for cleanliness before morning. (See Major Penrose's letter B, my report.)

Let us go further into reports that have been made upon this affair.

The consul of the United States at Matamoras, Mexico, has written a letter to the President, which is in this record, and from it I propose to read a paragraph:

Shots were also fired directly from the second story of the soldiers' quarters into the houses, facts substantiated beyond doubt by the character of the bullet holes and the angle of penetration. Mr. Cowen's house, referred to in the report, is not over 100 yards from the barracks, and all of the shooting—and it has been estimated that from 100 to 150 shots were fired—occurred within 250 yards of the garrison.

In this letter I want to call your attention to a few facts, not prominently developed in anything I have read, which show, almost conclusively, preconceived, concerted, and deliberate design and preparation on the part of every noncommissioned officer and enlisted man who was in the garrison at that time a malicious plot and agreement, which they happened to be able to carry out. Having been intimately associated with several Army officers who have been stationed here within the last few years, I am acquainted with the usual routine of garrison duty, as well as the geography of Fort Brown. The method of caring for arms is as follows: The noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters is in charge of the keys of the gun racks. No rifle can be taken out without his permission and his tour of duty is twenty-four hours. * * * The first shots were fired from the upper porch of the barracks to the left of the entrance to the post, proven by the facts as stated above, and further substantiated by the testimony of several civilians.

The Attorney-General of the United States sent the assistant United States district attorney to Brownsville to look into this matter. What does he say?

The city of Brownsville, without doubt, has suffered a terrible and unreasonable attack by soldiers, who should have acted just the opposite in affording them protection, and they are righteously indignant.

Mr. President, I will now read an extract from an affidavit of Wilbur F. Dennett, which was sent to me recently, made on the 10th day of December, 1906. I will print it in full in the RECORD, but I wish to read a paragraph:

The State of Texas, County of Cameron:

Wilbur F. Dennett came before me personally, and, being by me first duly sworn, on his oath deposes and says that on the night of August 13, 1906, I was awakened by firing of guns, and I remarked to my wife that the soldiers were firing on the town from the upstairs gallery of the barracks. I live on the corner of Fourteenth and Adams streets, one block from the garrison. As soon as I got up I looked at my watch, and by my time it was 11.50 p. m. The firing was almost continuous, and was from twelve to fifteen minutes in duration. There were three bugle calls during the firing, but am not familiar with them and do not know which calls they were. The first bugle call was close after the firing had begun, then in a few minutes another one, then still another one some minutes later. There was firing for at least a minute or two after the last bugle call. I did not go out after the firing ceased. The next morning, August 14, a mass meeting of the people of Brownsville was held in the United States court-house; a committee was appointed to investigate the outrage. After the meeting, we, the committee, immediately with our mayor, Dr. F. J. Combe, and Capt. William Kelly, our chairman, proceeded to the Administration building, in Fort Brown, and met the commanding officer, Major Penrose, and two of his officers. Major Penrose stated that he had believed the firing had been from the town on the garrison when the mayor, Doctor Combe, had first interviewed him last night after the firing, but that this morning Doctor Combe had visited him again, and in the face of the evidence he (Doctor Combe) had shown him—shells, unexploded cartridges, clips, etc., which had been picked up in the streets and alleys of Brownsville and turned over to the mayor as evidence—he (Major Penrose) was convinced his negro soldiers had attacked Brownsville the night before. Our chairman, Mr. Kelly, asked him the question, "if he had made a personal examination of the barracks to see if there were any bullet holes in them from the town side?" He said "he had, and had found no evidence at all of shots having been fired at the barracks from the town side." "There was," he said, "only one broken pane of glass, and that looked as if it was broken by a piece of brick." After other questions had been asked Mr. Penrose, I asked him "if he had made a personal examination of the barracks and arms, etc., immediately after the firing last night." He replied, "No; I could not be everywhere." I then asked him "if personal examinations of the troops, arms, and barracks had been made last night by any of his commissioned officers." He referred the question to the two officers present, and they each replied that "they had not personally made such examination." I then asked him if his knowledge of what had transpired last night had not been entirely obtained from what was told him by noncommissioned officers and privates of his command. He replied, "Yes," and then again told us of how much he deplored the occurrence, and that he would sooner have lost his right arm than have had it happen, and promised us that he would use his best efforts to discover who the guilty men were. Afterwards I was present at most of the meetings of the committee and at the examination of most of the witnesses, and the examiner was always careful to ask the question if the witness had seen any shots fired toward the garrison, and the reply was always the witness had seen no shots fired toward the garrison. The night was obscure; the moon did not rise till toward morning; the town is poorly lighted with coal-oil lamps, but the alley between Elizabeth and Washington streets, up which the soldiers marched until they arrived at the Miller Hotel—two blocks—is not lighted at all, and nobody was very anxious to look and find out the color of the men behind the guns, except a few who observed from places of security; but the guns used were the Springfield 1906 pattern, as proved by the empty shells, cartridges unexploded, bullets taken from bullet holes, and other evidence picked up by the police and others in the streets and alleys of Brownsville and turned over to the proper authorities as evidence. I will state that there was no prejudice, so far as I know, against the negro soldier by the people of Brownsville; that during my forty years' residence in this city negro soldiers had often been stationed here before, and from conversation with business people here they were preferred as more beneficial to the general trade of the town than the white soldiers; but from the time this battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry came here it was generally remarked by our town people how sullen, poorly dressed, slouchy, and generally showing very poor discipline. The men came out in town dirty, in their shirt sleeves, without blouses, and were generally the furthest removed from my conception of a soldier than I had ever seen, either in the Volunteer or Regular Army. I will state I have been, in politics, a lifelong Republican, and it was certainly a new experience for me to have to help defend our town from United States soldiers for more than a week until aid came from elsewhere, and that I slept at night, until the negro troops were gone, with loaded rifle and other arms at hand.

WILBUR F. DENNETT.

Sworn to and subscribed by Wilbur F. Dennett before me this the 10th day of December, A. D. 1906.

JNO. BARTLETT,
County Judge of Cameron County, Tex.

Mr. President, it has been suggested, and I believe the suggestion comes from a member of another body—from Ohio—that the fact that the grand jury of Cameron County, of which Brownsville is the county seat, found no indictment against these soldiers is evidence that the jury believed they were not guilty. I have here the charge of the district judge to the grand jury on this subject, which I will print in the RECORD, stopping only long enough now to say that he assumed, from a previous investigation, that the troops were the guilty parties, and he contented himself with urging the grand jury not to find bills against individuals from malice and vindictiveness, but only where the proof would warrant conviction of individuals by a trial jury.

Mr. President, instead of this grand jury incident showing that the soldiers were guiltless, it not only establishes that in the opinion of the jury and the district judge they were guilty, but it is an additional tribute to the fairness, to the justice, and to the forbearance of the people of Brownville under extraordinary provocation.

If they had been vindictive, if their hearts were filled with hate, they could have returned bills of indictment and probably convicted some men, if they sought to do so in such a manner as that. But they did not, and instead of being held up to the country as assassins it is an additional evidence of their self-restraint and remarkable forbearance.

But I go further. The testimony before the grand jury (and there was much of it) was taken in writing, sworn to, and signed by the witnesses for perpetuation. The same objection to it, therefore, can not be urged as has been urged to the testimony taken before the citizens' committee, and I will read two or three extracts from the testimony of witnesses before the grand jury. While I will only read extracts, I will print in the RECORD the whole testimony of each witness referred to. It seems there was an honest negro down there in that town to begin with. Here is what he says:

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 17, 1906.

William Henry, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live in Brownsville, Tex. I am working for Mr. McDevitt. On Saturday night before the shooting I was at saloon near the garrison fence, talking with several colored soldiers, who were there. I paid for my own beer; one of the soldiers treated me once. I heard the soldiers talking about getting even with a saloon uptown, and some man who had knocked a soldier down. I could not hear all they said, but I knew there was something wrong at the barroom. One of the men was Sergt. George Jackson, of Company B. He is the man who jumped the wire fence that evening while I was there and came to the barroom. If I am not mistaken, Corporal Madison was behind the bar, but I am not quite sure. Allison was behind the bar every time I went there. When they opened the barroom it was the day the soldiers had been paid off, and there was a big crowd both inside and outside the bar. Jackson is a great big black nigger; he is so black I call myself a white man alongside of him. He was one of the men who were cussing in the barroom. I could not make out right what they were saying, but I knew they were up to something. The man who told me to get out, they did not want any spy around there, was Allison, who is now in jail. This was after the shooting.

WM. HENRY.

WM. VOLZ, Foreman Grand Jury.

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 8, 1906.

Jose Martinez, being duly sworn, says:

My name is Jose Martinez. I live in a cottage of Mr. Randalls' at corner of alley back of F. Yturria's, in front of garrison wall. I was at home on night of August 13, 1906, the night of shooting. I was awake when shooting began, reading in front of door on garrison side. I first heard about five or six shots at once inside of garrison, between wall and quarters, right opposite my door. Then in about two or three minutes I heard men jumping wall into the street. They gathered in front of my door, and most of them, about twenty, came up alley; the others may have gone toward Elizabeth street. I next saw the men in alley, opposite gate of my yard, next door to Cowen's. They had rifles in their hands. They started up alley shooting right along. I fell on the floor and did not go out. I heard them talking English. I know they were negro soldiers. I saw them and their uniforms. I could not hear what they said. There were about twenty in party going toward town, up by Cowen's. I do not know where the balance of party who jumped wall went. I think about thirty jumped wall.

JOSE MARTINEZ.

WM. VOLZ, Foreman Grand Jury.

Now, here is the testimony of this same witness, George W. Randall, who testified before the citizens' committee. I want to call particular attention to one paragraph in his testimony before the grand jury when he talks about a shot going through his house. He says:

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 6, 1906.

G. W. Randall, being duly sworn, says:

My name is G. W. Randall. I live over the Western Union Telegraph office in block 61, city of Brownsville, on the right hand coming out of garrison gate. House is about 34 feet from garrison gate. I was at home on night of August 13, 1906. I was awakened by the shooting. There were two shots fired before I got up and looked out of window. I judge they were pistol shots. The men I saw moving were inside of garrison wall, and the only shots that I saw as they left the weapons were pointed nearly up. It led me to believe that it was an alarm of fire. Firing continued, and I looked from one window and then another, looking for light from fire; seeing no light I went to front window looking over garrison gate, and I saw the men moving and heard some low talking, but could not distinguish what was said until one man spoke in a louder voice than they had been using, saying, "Now we go," or "Here we go," and they came over the fence, passed over the wall, about abreast of the place between my place and Yturria's. Then the shooting was up that alley toward Louis Cowen's house. After the reports got up the street pretty well there were two shots right in front of my house. Those were rifle shots. One of them came from Elizabeth street side near corner of my house, went about 2 feet over my head and through the ceiling and on out through the house. From the direction in which shot came and the course it took indicate that it was fired from the upper gallery at lower or river end of quarters nearest river. The reason I think so is because the ball took an almost direct course. My home is a two-story one, and the bullet entered it about 28 feet from ground and came out about 6 inches above where it entered after passing through a room 20 feet wide. The first men I saw were inside garrison between wall and middle quarters and going up toward alley between Yturria and my house. I think there were fifteen or twenty shots before the first bugle call. There were no men in sight. Everything was over before the assembly call was made and the officer came. As soon as the assembly call was made the men came right downstairs. I could hear the noise of their boots.

Here is the testimony of this poor fellow, M. Y. Dominguez, who had his arm shot off. We have not had this testimony before. Let me read it:

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 21, 1906.

M. Y. Dominguez, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live in Brownsville, Tex. I am lieutenant of police.

On Monday, the 13th of August, at about eight minutes before midnight, I was at the market, when I heard shots in the direction of the lower end of Washington street. I rode down Washington street, when I got to the corner of Dona Rosa Pecina I heard the shots in the alley near Louie Cowen's house. A moment later the soldiers approached the crossing of the alley of Fourteenth street. Then I returned back up Washington street, a few yards from the corner of Pecina. I dismounted and tightened the girth of my horse; mounted again and went to the lamp post at Bollack's corner. From there I rode up on Thirteenth street to the crossing of the alley back of Miller's Hotel. When I got near Miller's Hotel I saw two files of soldiers coming in the alley, one on the hotel side and one on Bollack's side, and one of them said: "Give 'm hell!" Then I cried out: "People, wake up, here are the negro soldiers." Then they fired a volley. I did not get hurt that time and kept on at a trot toward Elizabeth street. Then they came out of the alley and turned. One filed along the wall of Miller's Hotel and the other along the walk of Wells's office, and kept firing in the direction I was going. When I tried to turn up Elizabeth street I received a shot in my right arm and my horse staggered down. The horse fell on top of my left leg and then another volley came. The soldiers at this time were about 10 yards from the corner of the alley of Miller's Hotel. I got out from under the horse and saw the soldiers turn back to the alley. It was so dark that I could not recognize any of the soldiers, but I know that they were negro soldiers, both by their clothing and their voices. When I got out from under my horse I made my way, the best I could, to Putegnat's drug store. The shot splintered my right arm so that it had to be amputated. I saw plainly that they were soldiers when I was at the Pecina corner. While on my way to the drug store, when I was in front of Crisell's, I heard the shots in the alley back of the "Ruby Saloon."

Here is a man named Herbert Elkins who testified. I do not know him, but he is doubtless a good man. Let us see what he says:

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 12, 1906.

Herbert Elkins, being sworn, says:

My name is Herbert Elkins. On the night of August 13, 1906, I was in my room, but awoke when the shooting began. My room is room nearest alley, in second story Leahy Hotel, and immediately opposite Louis Cowen's house, on side street, I think Fourteenth. First shooting seemed to come from the garrison wall, just inside or outside, at Cowen alley. There were about thirty or forty shots, more or less rapidly fired. It stopped for a few seconds and then began again. There were more shots fired before they came up the alley. They came up the alley, and I saw them in alley just before they got to the corner of Fourteenth street and alley. They were running when they got to corner; two were in lead, about 25 feet ahead of main body; these two men gave the orders. When the two men got to corner one was a little ahead of the other, and he ran into a mudhole—muddy hole was about junction of alley and street. Shots were fired down alley before they got to corner. He jumped to corner back of Cowen's and got at door, and called to the other not to go there it was muddy, and to come over on that side. These two fired about three shots each toward the Cowen house. They both reloaded and fired toward Cowen's, again reloaded, started across Fourteenth and got nearly across on up alley, then stopped as if they didn't know what to do, and fired three or four more shots into Cowen's house. These two men then ran on up alley, and the others, about fifteen in number, not less than twelve, not more than twenty, followed them up alley toward Miller Hotel. They only fired about four or five shots after they left Cowen's and before they got to Miller's. After they got up the alley about Miller's and farther they fired a good many more shots. I saw eight or ten soldiers run on back the way they came—i. e., down alley toward the wall. This was a few minutes, not over four or five, but time enough for Mrs. Sealy to go on over and bring the Cowen family. I saw no firing by men on their way back. I heard the bugle calls just after the firing began, and before they came up alley. The first two calls were alike. A few seconds after I heard a different call, blown once; I heard roll call and voices. This was about twenty minutes after the shooting. Men that I saw had gotten back about ten minutes before the men had gone down from the barracks to the roll call. The men had on khaki pants, leggings, and blue shirts (light blue summer shirts). The two in front had on hats; the others were in a run, and I didn't notice if they had caps or hats. They were niggers. The two men in front were about 5 feet 6 inches in height, one a little heavier than the other. I saw the patrol come by, and on its way down, about one hour or one hour and one-half after the shooting. I saw no white men with them, but Dr. F. Combe was behind. They stopped in front of Suly's and talked. Doctor C. talked to Mrs. Seely. The patrol stood there. As they came down by Knoklaski's office the rear part of the company made out to come on sidewalk, but followed head of column around the tree. Then they did come on sidewalk—i. e., part of them. One of the company, whom I took to be one of the two leaders in shooting at Cowen's house, the one who was warned not to get into the mud, said: "We'll kill the rest of the white sons-of-bitches to-morrow." Some were laughing and talking. They seemed not to pay much attention to the officers. Mrs. Seely heard this. I think Doctor Combe had just left, going toward the post up toward the front of the company. Just a little after the first as the shooting began, and before the second shooting and before men left wall, I saw about two lights inside of quarters, second from river, and heard one or two men on downstairs porch toward town running. I saw one or two shots fired from upper story of second barracks from river, toward town generally.

There was much other testimony before the grand jury, showing, among other things, that shells and bullets and clips were picked up in the streets, but I will simply place it in the RECORD:

GRAND JURY ROOM, September 8, 1906.

Grenaro Padron, being duly sworn, says:

I am city policeman. On the night of August 13, 1906, when the shooting began, I was on the corner of Merchants' National Bank, with Florencio Biseno, Mike Jagan, and M. Alonso, jr. I went down Elizabeth street and got pistol from Tillman, and went to Miller Hotel, on Thirteenth street, and on to Washington, and turned right down to Pecini's, corner of Washington and Fourteenth, and stood there. They were shooting then in alley at Cowen's. I saw them cross Fourteenth street from Cowen's to Lahay's. I saw the lieutenant of police coming down Washington on horseback. I met him and told him to get down, as he was a mark. He got down and tightened girth of horse. He remounted and we started up Washington, I ahead. On reaching Thirteenth met Macedonio Ramiquez. We turned toward Elizabeth on Thirteenth. I told Dominquez not to try and cross alley, as soldiers were coming up alley shooting. Again I told him and grabbed his saddle. He paid no attention, but went ahead. I got in the dark near Huyhtnes's and got in doorway, and I then jumped into street, when I saw three soldiers in alley throw down on Dominquez. They fired, then I fired a shot and then fired another, and then I ran to corner. When I ran they cried: "Here the two more." I looked out and saw five or six, not less, come in my direction. I then went up Washington in direction of Finks, hiding myself in shade of trees. When I got to the last tree they turned corner and fired in my direction. Again, when they saw me they fired. I ran to corner of Sahuallo, and again they shot at me. This was the time they fired on Starck's home. There were not less than five or six, and they kept advancing and shooting. I ran to Eleventh street.

Among those soldiers there was one who had on a white shirt. The shirt was outside of his trousers. He had no hat on. I saw his bare head. Right behind the three who first come out alley at Miller Hotel corner there were several others, and he was one of them. He was a man of stout build, medium height; a little taller than I, more or less.

C. H. Thorn, being duly sworn, says:

My name is C. H. Thorn. I live in block 62, street 9, city of Brownsville. I was at home and awake when the shooting began on the night of August 13, 1906. My bedroom is downstairs at rear of house, about 30 or 40 feet from alley. I was in bed, but not asleep, heard firing, and it kept getting nearer; it came from direction of garrison, evidently coming up alley. I started to put on my slippers and heard reports in alley opposite my house, right outside of window Heard them talking and breathing heavily. I distinguished, very readily by their voices, that they were negroes, and one thing I remember, but not in exact words, it was either, "There he goes," or "There they go;" then another said twice, "Give 'em hell! Give 'em hell! God damn 'em!" in a lower voice and he fired. The others were already firing. All this time they were going on up alley. They went on by. The firing continued for about ten minutes up toward Twelfth street. I would think everything was over when I could hear more shots. These were also scattered shots, but I couldn't locate them. I found next morning that a bullet had gone through my privy and into the kitchen. It went through weatherboarding flat.

F. E. Starck, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live in Brownsville, on Washington street. On the night of Monday, the 13th of August, about 12.30 I was awaked by a volley being fired into my house. The bullets went into my bedroom in my children's bedroom. I jumped up out of bed and grabbed some of the children and took them to the back end of the house. I then came back, got my Winchester, and went to the front windows. I saw a man running behind the big ash trees in front of Mr. Turk's residence, opposite my home. When I got a bead on him I saw his police badge and recognized him as Policeman Genaro Padron. Almost at the same moment I heard a shot fired in the direction of Mr. Porter's residence (Carson), and I presume this is the shot which hit Mr. Turk's house. I did not see any soldiers. The shooting still continued near Miller's Hotel, and I heard a volley fired in the alley back of Turk's residence. Next morning Mayor Combe and myself found some empty cartridge shells in front of my house. They belonged to new Springfield rifle which the Army now uses. We picked up about ten or twelve shells scattered in a space of about 10 feet.

W. H. Sharpe, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says:

I live at Fort Brown. I am the post blacksmith. On the 14th of August, the day after the riot, I received verbal orders from the post quartermaster, Lieutenant Greer, through Q. M. Sergt. Roland Allsby, to repair four gun racks, which were brought to my shop. These racks belonged to Company C, as I heard, but I do not know so from my own personal knowledge. The staples which held the lock had been pulled out, and I replaced them. The piece of iron on which the staples are riveted is 2 inches wide, and one-fourth of an inch in thickness; it would require considerable force to break the staples out of the iron. The upper part of the racks, which hold the pistols, showed marks (gashes) as if made with an ax, but the locks had not been disturbed.

F. J. Combe, being duly sworn, says:

My name is F. J. Combe. I am a practicing physician; also mayor of the city of Brownsville, Tex. About 12 o'clock on the night of August 13, 1906, I was awakened by what I thought were four or five pistol shots, immediately followed by several rifle shots, which my military experience made me think were fired by high-power rifles. I was sleeping on my cot on the back gallery of my home downstairs, on corner of Elizabeth and Ninth streets. I hardly had time to get out of cot when I heard another volley of shots fired. I got into my trousers, picked up my pistol, called to my brother, Doctor Joe, saying, "I'm going down to stop that firing," or words to that effect. I had hardly gotten out of my side door when I was joined by my brother, and we ran down Elizabeth street. When we arrived opposite Putynat's pharmacy, I gave the signal for a policeman, and Gerard Padron, police officer, came running around the corner from Twelfth street, Merchants' National Bank. He was breathless and said to me, "Mr. Mayor, don't go down there, you will be shot;" and I told him, "Come on." But before we got to the corner I found blood stains on the sidewalk, and I said to Doctor Joe, "Follow these stains and find out who has been hurt." I went on down the street, as far as Crixell's saloon, in the middle of next block. By that time Doctor Joe returned and said, "Joe Dominguez is shot in the right arm." The chief of police then came up and told me that two policemen were missing. We went on down the street to look for them. It was then that Doctor Joe and I found Joe Dominguez's dead horse, opposite Mr. Wreford's office, corner Elizabeth and Thirteenth streets. I then started to go into the post, but was requested by my brother and the police officers not to do so. I said to Doctor Joe, "Go to 'central' and call up Major Penrose at Fort Brown and tell him I want to speak to him." He started off, but returned in a few minutes with Captain Lyon and about sixty negro soldiers of his battalion. Doctor Joe had halted them on Twelfth street between Elizabeth and alley. Some of Captain Lyon's men in the rear, seeing one or two of my officers with rifles, started to break and go towards them, saying "Captain, these men have guns." I ran back, calling out "Let those men alone; they are officers." Captain Lyon ordered them back into the ranks. The men did so in a surly manner. Doctor Joe and I then went into the post with Captain Lyon. I met Major Penrose at the gate, and said to him, "Major, your men have fired on the town, killed one citizen, seriously wounded a peace officer, killed his horse, and generally shot up the town." He said, "Doctor Combe, I hardly believe that. I am told, on the contrary, that the citizens have been shooting on the garrison." We talked for probably fifteen or twenty minutes, when Captain Macklin, officer of the day, walked up, saluted the commanding officer and said, "I report, sir,"—that was about 1 o'clock a. m. Major Penrose said in reply, "Where have you been, Captain Macklin? We have been looking everywhere for you." "Sir, I was in my quarters asleep," replied Macklin. Major Penrose said, "I have sent two men to your quarters and they reported that you were not there." Captain Macklin replied, "Yes, sir; I was in my quarters asleep." Major Penrose then ordered Captain Macklin to take charge of his company. (I neglected to state that when I met Captain Lyon in town, he asked me. "Doctor, have you seen Captain Macklin? I am looking for him, and we feel that he has been gotten away with in town." I answered, "I don't think so; if so, we would have known it by this time.") I then said to Major Penrose, "I am going back into town, and I warn you not to allow any officer or man of your command to go into the city, as I will not be responsible for their lives." On arriving at Mr. Wells's office, Elizabeth and Thirteenth, I was met by some one who said, "There's a dead man in the Ruby saloon." I went to the saloon, and a short while afterwards Mr. Garito, the justice of the peace, came and requested me to examine the body. I did so, and found that the dead man was Frank Duboisne, and that he was shot through the body by a high-power rifle, from which wound he died almost instantly. The body was lying in the courtyard of the Ruby saloon, near a cistern. I then went to corner of Miller Hotel alley, at the place where Lieutenant of Police Dominguez had told me he was fired upon, and while walking around there I stepped on some empty brass cartridge shells, which I picked up. Amongst them were the clip with two ball cartridges. These are in possession of the sheriff, for which I have his descriptive receipt. I first saw a soldier's cap in Wells's office a day or so afterwards. I understand Mr. Charlie Starck found it.

I was on the street nearly all night. At daybreak next morning I went to the scene of firing, and a bandolier, such as comes in the ammunition boxes, with an arsenal and issue number and date on it, was handed to me with some more empty shells by, I think, Mr. Houghton. I then went around on Washington street with Mr. Starck, who told me that his home had been fired on, and found quite a number of empty brass cartridge shells strewn along the street in front of his home. These shells were the regulation shells used by the Springfield rifle, now in use by the United States Army.

The first call, in my opinion, was sounded from three to five minutes after first shooting. I think it was "Call to arms."

FREDERICK J. COMBE, M. D.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this September 8, 1906.

WM. VOLZ, Foreman Grand Jury.

Now, Mr. President, remember that I am maintaining the single proposition just now that Federal soldiers and not citizens committed this crime at Brownsville. Against this testimony that they did so—the testimony of reputable and to a large degree disinterested witnesses, testimony which is clear, strong, direct, natural, and consistent with indisputable physical facts—what is there? Nothing save the alibi sworn to by all the accused, and their further testimony that not one of them know a single guilty party or has knowledge of any fact or circumstance indicating who the guilty are, which in itself, under the circumstances, is some evidence of concerted action on the part of the soldiers.

In addition, Mr. President, to the direct testimony, which I have hurriedly reviewed, the testimony of the soldiers to which I have just adverted is disproved or disbelieved by every official, civil or military, and every disinterested citizen from General Nettleton down, who has investigated the matter on the ground. It is disproved by the manifest want of malice and motive on the part of the citizens, and the existence of such malice and motive on the part of the soldiers. It is disproved by the fact that time enough elapsed after the shooting for the soldiers to return and answer the roll call, if, in truth, any satisfactory roll call was ever had. It is disproved by the fact that no immediate and satisfactory examination of the guns was had to determine whether all were there, or if there whether they had been freshly discharged. It is disproved by the direction of the firing, no bullets whatever having entered the garrison from any quarter. How well they protected themselves and their associates! It is disproved by the direction of the firing further, bullets having entered residences at such angles as to demonstrate that they were fired from the upper story of the garrison. It is disproved by the character of the bullets and shells and clips, being such as were uniformly used by the soldiers and not by citizens, rendering it utterly improbable, if not impossible, that other than soldiers could have committed this outrage.

In short, Mr. President, the testimony of the soldiers is unnatural, improbable, and inconsistent with facts which are admitted, or which are established by physical conditions incapable of distortion or falsehood.

It may be—probably it is true, Mr. President—that some of these soldiers did not actually participate as principals or as accessories either before or after the fact in this outrage, and it may be that some of them know of no fact or circumstance implicating the guilty parties. To the extent, sir, that may be true the discharge is a hardship; but from the necessity of the case, and as in the cases cited from the military records of General Grant and General Lee, it is a hardship which must be borne for the good of the service and the peace of communities where troops are stationed. Even this hardship will be mitigated, if not wholly removed, by the course suggested by the War Department—that all men of this battalion will be permitted to reenlist who absolutely purge themselves of guilt or guilty knowledge.

It may be, Mr. President, that the discussion of this matter on my part should rest here, but in a larger view other thoughts suggest themselves. From an early day in our national life and continuously since then the negro question has been the most dangerous problem that has confronted the American people. In part, for more than half a century it bitterly estranged the sections of the Union and culminated in the destruction of the limbs or lives of nearly a million white men in the greatest civil conflict which the world has known. And that, too, Mr. President, when the condition of the black race, with its ages of slavery, its ignorance, its poverty, and its helplessness, excited, and now profoundly excites, the sympathy and compassion of the great body of white people in the South.

Notwithstanding all this, in spite of the past, with its conflicts and its sacrifices and its sorrows and its destruction of life and property, this problem is still the gravest with which we must deal. It involves labor, education, suffrage, social order, civil liberty, self-government, and the integrity of the white race. The end no man can see.

Southerners think deeply and profoundly of this race problem and its ultimate solution. Closing their eyes and looking down the ages different vistas rise. Sometimes the black race is deported. Sometimes the races continue to live here separately, as now, in comparative peace, one subordinate to the other. Sometimes they turn with unspeakable aversion from a blended and corrupted and inferior race. Sometimes there is war between the races—which may God avert—bloody, red-handed, vengeful war; war which seeks and can only end in the survival of the fittest.

In the midst of such awful possibilities human prophecy is idle, but we do know that the man or party who would create false hopes and add to the problem which will test the manhood, the patriotism, and the Christianity of the land deserves no place in the confidence or affections of the American people.

Speaking, Mr. President, in part for the people of Texas—and plainness of speech is best—it is not inappropriate to say that they have dealt fairly and generously with the negro in all essentials, in education, in charities, in helpful sympathies, and in the protection of life, liberty, and property. But I would not be candid with you if I did not say that in other respects their purposes are equally resolute and unalterable. They are opposed to political domination by the ignorant and the vicious; they are opposed to social equality with the negro, and they are opposed to every tendency which will ultimately be destructive of the purity and integrity of the white race. Above all this, however vital, there is that in the testimony in this case, and which to a degree underlies this trouble, which impels me to declare even in this great Chamber that they purpose to protect even with their lives what in their womankind "is the immediate jewel of her soul."

APPENDIX.

GRAND JURY.

[Judge Welch's charge on negro soldier outrage.]

And now, gentlemen of the grand jury, amongst the other responsible duties of your position is that of making a full, thorough, and complete investigation of the unprovoked, murderous midnight assault committed by the negro soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry upon the citizens and homes of Brownsville on the night of the 13th of August. An inoffensive citizen was shot down and killed by them while closing his gate. An unwarranted and cowardly assault was made on the lieutenant of police of Brownsville and his arm shattered by their bullets, requiring its amputation. Fiendish malice and hate, showing hearts blacker than their skins, was evidenced by their firing of volley after volley from deadly rifles into and through the doors and windows of family residences, clearly with the brutish hope on their part of killing women and children, and thus make memorable their hatred of the white race. Hard words, these, but strictly true and warranted by uncontested facts.

It was my province to come amongst your patient people even while their terrible fears and horror of another outbreak were upon them, and God spare me in my life the sorrow of ever again witnessing the faces of agonized women and fear-stricken children, tensioned with days and nights of suffering and waiting for relief, with none coming from either nation or State to give them assurance that greater and unspeakable outrages were not to follow.

Tardy relief did come. At the eleventh hour the fiends who disgraced the uniforms they were permitted to wear and shamed a nation were removed. That all of the three companies were blamable must be conceded, for they knew who were guilty, and they shielded and sheltered them and failed to give them up. Hence it is that it has been left to the civil authorities of the State, and especially to this district court, to apprehend if possible those directly guilty of murder, assault to murder, and the ruffianly conspiracies to that end, as the authorities of the United States in charge have declared their inability to discover who were the uniformed thugs and murderers that committed the outrages.

You are the most important auxiliary of the court, its very right hand, and to you this matter must be relegated. I wish to say that the individuals against whom even the slightest evidence existed are under arrest and subject to such action as you, with due regard to your oaths and responsibility shall take. All the process and powers of this court, coextensive with the bounds of our State, are at your service to bring witnesses or other evidence before you, and you are to determine when a prima facie case of guilt is made and indict accordingly.

I know, gentlemen of the jury, that it takes a long time for blood to cool when it is raised to fever heat by such terrible outrages as your people have had to endure, but in this second test of their high moral courage you, as their special representatives, must be calm, wise, and just, and for the sake of the good name of your community you can not and must not indulge in a single thought of vengeance. You must present for trial before the courts of our State only those against whom evidence is adduced sufficiently pertinent and strong to warrant conviction by a trial jury, and going beyond mere suspicion or even strong probability.

The lengthy investigation of a committee of your leading citizens, made while these outrages were fresh, is at your service. I also present to you three affidavits made before me by W. J. McDonald, captain of Company B of the ranger force of Texas, against twelve of the negro soldiers and one civilian, a negro exsoldier. All these parties are under arrest, and within the jurisdiction of the civil authorities of this State, and to await the action of our courts. Hence it is that if it has ever been known by committee, sheriff, State ranger, or other officer or individual who, if any, of these men are guilty, that knowledge should come to you, as the grand inquisitorial body that represents not only the county of Cameron, but the State of Texas. I have no hesitation in saying that I share in the universal belief that among those under arrest are many of the murderers, but something more than mere belief and opinion are required to vindicate the law. Evidence must be had upon which to predicate an indictment and warrant a trial. If you indict on mere suspicion or opinion and without evidence you leave our people and community open to the charge of injustice, and the proceedings will resolve themselves into mere delay, for in the end an indictment unsustained by evidence must be dismissed.

I am glad to state that our small criminal docket will give you opportunity to have with you in your investigation the counsel and experience of the district attorney. He has good red blood in his veins, and plenty of it, and will bring to your aid in serving the best interests of our people an integrity of purpose that can not be successfully impeached by any man. He is your legal adviser, but you are the keepers of your own consciences.

Remember that in the grave responsibility that comes to you, collectively and individually, your acts will be photographed to the nation, that through its press it has approved your high moral courage and patience and condemns the outrages on your people.

Do nothing to forfeit their righteous verdict of your worth.

HEADQUARTERS THIRTEENTH ARMY CORPS,
DEPARTMENT OF THE TENNESSEE,
La Grange, Tenn., November 16, 1862.

SPECIAL FIELD ORDER No. 6.

Until further orders no passes will be granted to any civilian to pass south of Wolf River, nor will any civilian be permitted to come within our lines from south of said river.

All passes heretofore granted inconsistent with this order are hereby revoked.

II. The facts having been officially reported to the major-general commanding that a portion of the Twentieth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers did on the night of the 7th of November instant, at Jackson, Tenn., break into the store of G. W. Graham & Co. and take therefrom goods to the amount of $841.40, the property of said Graham and Co., and did cut the tent of R. B. Kent and N. A. Bass and take therefrom goods to the value of $345, the property of said Kent and Bass, and burn and destroy the tent and poles, also the property of said Kent and Bass, of the value of $56.25, all of which damages amount to the sum of $1,242.66, and it further appearing from said report that Capt. C. L. Page, Company D; Capt. I. M. North, Company E; Capt. G. W. Kennard, Company I; Lieuts. Harry King, Company B; William Seers, Company C; John Edmonston, Company E; David Wadsworth, Company I; I. Bailey, Company F; Vietor H. Stevens, Company H; R. M. Evans, Company I; Charles Taylor, Company I, of said regiment, were absent from their commands at the time of the perpetration of these outrages, in violation of orders, and without proper cause, when they should have been present, and also that Capt. Orton Frisbie, of Company H, acting in capacity of major, and Capt. John Tunison, of Company G, the senior captain, immediately after the commission of these depredations did not exercise their authority to ferret out the men guilty of the offenses, but that on the contrary Captain Tunison interposed to prevent search and discovery of the parties really guilty, and that Captain Frisbie, after the commission of the said depredations, being in command of the regiment, remained behind twenty-four hours after the regiment marched, and the names of the individual parties guilty not having been disclosed, it is therefore ordered:

I. That the said sum of $1,242.66 be assessed against said regiment and the officers hereinbefore named, excepting such enlisted men as were at the time sick in hospital or absent with proper authority; that the same be charged against them on the proper muster and pay rolls and the amount each is to pay noted opposite his name thereon, the officers to be assessed pro rata with the men on the amount of their pay proper and that the same so collected will be paid by the commanding officer of the regiment to the parties entitled to the same.

II. That Capt. Orton Frisbie and Capt. John Tunison, of the Twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for willful neglect of duty and violation of orders, are hereby mustered out of the service of the United States, to take effect this day.

By order of Brig. Gen. U. S. Grant.

JNO. A. RAWLINS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

[The Charlotte Observer, November 29, 1906.]

PRECEDENT FOR PRESIDENT'S ACTION.

The Observer takes great pleasure in presenting below conclusive evidence that President Roosevelt's order disbanding three colored companies for an offense by some of their number is not, as has been claimed, without precedent in the military history of this country. It will be universally admitted that no higher authority than General Lee's on what is right and just in military discipline could possibly be offered. As for the authenticity of the evidence, all North Carolina will vouch in the most absolute manner for the truth of any statement sponsored by Colonel Burgwyn. And as Colonel Burgwyn says, the name of the command can be given if desired. His communication and the appended military order follows:

"I see it stated that President Roosevelt's order disbanding a battalion of colored troops is without precedent in the military history of this country. There are those now living who read the following order on dress parade and witnessed its execution. I omit the name of the command, but it can be given if desired:

"'HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
"'October —, 1863.

"'General Order No. —.

"'The —— —— Battalion, for cowardly conduct on every battlefield from Gettysburg to the present time, is unworthy of a place as an organization in the Army of Northern Virginia. It will be marched to division headquarters Wednesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, and surrender its colors and be marched to the rear in disgrace. The general commanding the Army of Northern Virginia regrets that there are some brave officers and men belonging to this organization who must share in this common disgrace, but the good of the service requires it, and they must bear it as brave soldiers.

"'By command of GEN. R. E. LEE.

"'——, Assistant Adjutant-General.'

"Yours, truly,

"WM. H. S. BURGWYN.

"WELDON, N. C., November 26."

It is here explicitly stated that "there are some brave officers and men belonging to this organization who must share in this common disgrace, but the good of the service requires it, and they must bear it as brave soldiers." In this case, as in the Brownsville affair, the offense was very grave, and the "good of the service" required that the innocent suffer disgrace with the guilty, since separation was impossible. That one offense occurred in time of war and the other in time of peace makes not the least difference in principle. The unsoldierly conduct punished by General Lee could not have occurred at all in time of peace, and the riot at Brownsville could not have given a tenth of the scandal had it occurred in time of war—to each its own guilt, but each equally meriting punishment.

The Observer has always earnestly and at times vehemently insisted upon equal and exact rights before the law for the colored man. Any injustice to him by the dominant race is hateful to it. But no more than the white man is he entitled to immunity from punishment on account of race. We hold that the three companies were justly discharged from the Army, and if they had been white troops it would have made not the slightest difference in our sight. Indeed, if they had been white, no one would ever have chirped at their discharge.

We commend Colonel Burgwyn's communication to the especial consideration of our highly esteemed contemporaries, the New York Sun and the New York Evening Post.

During the delivery of Mr. CULBERSON'S speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. CULBERSON'S speech,

Mr. FORAKER. I do not rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of engaging in a discussion of the race question. That question, as I have repeatedly said since this matter has been debated in the Senate, does not belong in the controversy we have been having. It belittles this question to introduce that subject. At another time, however, I may take occasion, if that question is to be thrust upon us, to make some remarks in answer to it; but for the present I pass that by.

Neither do I intend now, Mr. President, to discuss the question of the constitutional or legal power of the President to make the order he made discharging these troops. I do not propose to discuss that because some days ago, in response to the President's message, I made some remarks upon that subject, and because, in the second place, the resolution now before the Senate is simply a resolution directing the Committee on Military Affairs to make an investigation as to the facts in this case. When this resolution shall be adopted and the committee shall have made that investigation and shall have reported to the Senate, if it be in order, we can again discuss the question of constitutional and legal power, but for the present I pass that by for the reason indicated.

Neither do I propose at this time, Mr. President, to discuss the facts as disclosed by the testimony that has been sent to the Senate by the President, or the testimony that has just now been added by the Senator from Texas to what was sent us by the President.

I do not propose to discuss the facts at this time because this is not the time to try the case if we are to further investigate it. I discussed the competency of the testimony and the weight of it some days ago, because challenged to do so by statements found in the President's message, but only for the purpose of showing why, in my judgment, the testimony that had seemed sufficient to the President was not in fact sufficient.

I pass that by, therefore, until I know what the action of the Senate will be upon this resolution. If it be adopted, as I think it should be, and as I hope it will be, the investigation will follow, all the testimony will be brought before us in due time by the committee, and then we can discuss it and weigh it and determine what it establishes and what it does not establish.

My purpose in rising at this time, Mr. President, is not, therefore, to discuss any of the questions to which the Senator from Texas has addressed himself, but rather only to defend myself from the charge made by the Senator from Texas that in the remarks submitted to the Senate some days ago I reflected on Captain McDonald, a distinguished acquaintance of his and a citizen of Brownsville, who met with commendation at the hands of Major Blocksom. The reference to my remarks submitted a few days ago just now made by the Senator from Texas is of such a character that one not being advised would conclude that I had disparaged the character of Captain McDonald. Not so, Mr. President. I called attention in the following language to Captain McDonald. Speaking of the report of Major Blocksom, in which he spoke of having met a number of the "sterling citizens of Brownsville," I proceeded as follows:

One man who seems to have won his admiration and excited it unduly was a Captain McDonald, who is described as a captain of Texas Rangers, whatever they may be, and he pays him this high compliment. Now, Mr. President, think of this going into an official report:

It is possible—

Says Major Blocksom—

It is possible McDonald might have fought the entire battalion with his four or five rangers were their obedience as blind as his obstinacy. It is said here he is so brave he would not hesitate to "charge hell with one bucket of water."

Then immediately he says:

I met many sterling people in Brownsville.

I was then interrupted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to know what that adjective was, and I repeated it, "sterling," and remarked:

Captain McDonald is one of them. Like Ben Adhem, his "name led all the rest."

With that I quit Captain McDonald and did not refer to him again in the course of those remarks except to say later the following. I was speaking of my desire to have an investigation. I was speaking of my desire to secure for these discharged soldiers, who have been made to suffer so severely, an opportunity somewhere, some time, in some manner, a day in court, where they could confront their accusers and cross-examine their witnesses, and in this connection I said:

I want to see that gentleman who is "able to charge all hell with one bucket of water." I should like to cross-examine him, Mr. President.

That is all I said about him. I do not know why he should be offended, unless because I called him a gentleman. [Laughter.] But, Mr. President, I had no thought then of reflecting upon him. He was an entire stranger to me. The reference to him made by Major Blocksom was quite unusual. It does not seem to me unnatural that I should have made comment upon it. Since then, however, I have learned a great deal about Captain McDonald, and I want here and now, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Texas, and in view of some other things that have come to me, to pay proper tribute to Captain McDonald, to show what a brave, public-spirited man he is, and to put it into the RECORD, where it will live forever, for I assume our institutions will be perpetuated.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will never be read.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests that it will never be read. I do not know. I think this will be read, but for fear it will not be read I will read it myself. I read from the Cincinnati Enquirer of a few days ago, in order that we may know who this gentleman is and what he is. I do not intend to comment upon him, but will give him just as his friends have given him in this article, just as he has caused himself, in what seems to be an inspired article, to appear before the American people. This article has a rather sensational headline and it makes some references to me, which I hope I will be excused for reading under the circumstances:

GLITTER IN M'DONALD'S EYE—NOTED TEXAS RANGER, WHO PROBED NEGRO RIOTS, RESENTS ALLEGED SLURS OF SENATOR FORAKER—WALKING ARSENAL DESIRES TO MEET THE OHIOAN—PICTURESQUE WESTERNER "WOULD CHARGE HELL WITH A BUCKET OF WATER," SAYS MAJOR BLOCKSOM.

[Special dispatch to the Enquirer.]

AUSTIN, TEX., December 29.

Capt. Bill McDonald is willing to go to Washington to tell what he knows about the negro soldiers' riot at Brownsville before a Congressional investigating committee. He is anxious to go. He says that he wants to meet Senator J. B. FORAKER, who, according to published dispatches, referred to him slurringly on the floor of the Senate the other day as "that Captain McDonald." Captain McDonald is the man mentioned in Major Blocksom's report on the Brownsville riot as the man who would "charge hell with a bucket of water."

Probably having no other use for the water. [Laughter.]

Captain McDonald does not say that he would make any trouble for Senator FORAKER when he meets him—

What a relief that is to me [laughter]—

but the cold glitter in his steel-blue eyes when he refers to the Ohio Senator does not indicate that it would be an altogether pleasant meeting.

Captain McDonald is said to know more about the Brownsville affair than any of those who investigated it.

How natural therefore, Mr. President, that we should have an opportunity to examine him.

He was sent there by Governor Lanham as soon as it occurred, and spent some time making a personal inquiry into the trouble. As a direct result of his research, twelve negro soldiers were arrested on the charge of being implicated in the shooting up of the town, in which one man was killed and another wounded.

These are the men selected by Captain McDonald and arrested upon his order as the men who, as the result of his investigation, were by him regarded as the guilty persons who had done the firing, and they are the same twelve men who were discharged by the grand jury, as we were advised by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] in his remarks a moment ago, after they had taken a great deal of testimony, all the testimony presumably that Captain McDonald had before him when he directed these twelve men, as the guilty ones, to be arrested and taken before the grand jury.

Captain McDonald made a written report of his findings to Governor Lanham and to President Roosevelt.

I think we ought to have that.

BIG TEXAS RANGER.

Captain McDonald is the most noted peace officer in the Southwest. He has been commander of a company of Texas Rangers for nearly twenty years, and during that period he has experienced many thrilling encounters with desperate men. Only a few weeks ago he and three members of his company were riding along a road near Rio Grande City when they were fired upon by Mexicans in ambush. Captain McDonald and his men returned the fire in the darkness, being guided in their aim by the flashes of the guns of the attacking party. They killed four Mexicans and wounded others.

That is his account of that transaction. I have another account written by people who were not in sympathy with what Captain McDonald did on that occasion, which does not put quite so favorable a view upon it either as to the bravery of the man or as to the justification for the killing of four men and the wounding of five others. But that is not in order now. I mention it only that we may get thoroughly, or at least as thoroughly as we may be able to, acquainted with the gentleman who is vouched for by the Senator from Texas as truthful and honest, and as fearless and brave as he is truthful and honest. More of this:

Captain McDonald has killed a number of men while in the performance of his duty as an officer of the law. He is literally "shot to pieces," but he is still as lithe and active as a boy. He is never unarmed. Day and night he wears a big .45, and one of the latest improved automatic pistols. He sleeps with both these pistols by his side, whether in a hotel in town or in camp in some remote and dangerous locality of the border region. He says that he never knows when he may need them.

The article goes on at that same rate telling of a number of other difficulties and a number of other killings. I shall not take the time to read further, but I ask that it all may be printed in the RECORD where it can be read by anyone who may desire to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LIFE ON THE FRONTIER.

Practically all of Captain McDonald's life has been spent upon the frontier. He trailed Indians and hunted buffalo upon the plains of Texas forty years ago. He has a record for coolness and bravery that is almost unequaled.

Ten years ago Captain McDonald had a pistol duel with Sheriff Joe Matthews, of Childress County, and two deputies at Quanah. He killed Sheriff Matthews and was himself wounded almost to death. The two men had trouble over who should have custody of a prisoner whom Captain McDonald had arrested in an adjoining county. Sheriff Matthews and two deputies came to Quanah with the avowed intention of killing McDonald. The latter heard of this threat and was prepared for trouble. Matthews and McDonald met upon the public square and both pulled their pistols. Matthews got in the first shot, the bullet going through McDonald's right lung. They were within ten feet of each other, but the force of the bullet and the terrible wound did not floor McDonald. He fired at Matthews, and the bullet struck a piece of plug tobacco and a thick notebook that shielded Matthew's heart. The two men fired the second shots simultaneously. Matthews was struck near the heart, and he fell to the ground unconscious. McDonald was hit in the right side, and the bullet ranged upward and came out at his neck. While Matthews and McDonald were having this duel the two deputies of Matthews were shooting at McDonald at close range, but all of their bullets went wild.

TENDED TO THE DEPUTIES.

When McDonald saw that he had killed Matthews, he turned his attention to the two deputies. He fired at them as they fled down the street and he then sank down unconscious. He was a long time recovering from the wounds he received.

Seven years ago John and George Humphries, two white farmers who lived in the "trans-cedar" country in the northeastern part of the State, were lynched one night by a party of unknown men. Governor Sayers sent Captain McDonald to the scene of the crime with instructions to discover, if possible, the guilty parties and to arrest them. Alone and unaided Captain McDonald arrested twelve of the most desperate men of that community and was successful in establishing the guilt of all of them. They were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. In hunting up evidence against these men he traveled about the country and visited them at their homes alone. He received a number of threats against his life, but he paid no attention to them.

It was through the individual efforts of Captain McDonald that the notorious Reese-Townsend feud, which caused many killings in Colorado and Bastrop counties, was broken up. On one occasion, when the members of these opposing factions, numbering more than 100 men, were drawn up in fighting array at Columbus, Captain McDonald walked up to them and ordered them to deliver over their arms to him. The crowd demurred at first, and he had to knock one of the more ob-streperous objectors to his order down with a gun. He searched every member of both factions and took all of their guns and knives away from them. At another threatened outbreak of these same feudists a few months later at Bastrop he performed a similar service.

FOE TO SMUGGLERS.

Captain McDonald has hunted down many desperate robbers and smugglers along the Rio Grande. He was also stationed in the Panhandle for several years, and it was through his active work that that part of the State was rid of the bands of cattle and horse thieves who formerly made it their rendezvous. He had many fights with these outlaws. He left the town of Quanah one day on the trail of a notorious criminal who was badly wanted in different parts of the State for murder and robbery. He followed the outlaw for more than 400 miles, stopping only an hour or two at a time to get a little sleep and give his horse its needed rest. He finally overtook his man in what was then known as "No Man's Land," which is now a part of Oklahoma. He found him in camp with four other men, who were also probably outlaws, but Captain McDonald did not recognize them. He was after this particular man, and he unhesitatingly dismounted at the camp and walked to where the men were sitting and told the fellow that he was his prisoner. Captain McDonald says that he expected every minute to be shot before he got away from that remote camp, but he was not molested as he forced his prisoner to mount a horse and ride away with him toward Texas.

Three or four years ago Captain McDonald had a fight with cattle thieves in the Panhandle. Three of them escaped, and he followed them alone for 300 miles, finally rounding them up near Norman, Okla., where he arrested them single-handed and placed them in jail.

These are only a few of the incidents in Captain McDonald's long career as a commander of the State rangers. They serve to show what kind of a man Senator FORAKER would have to deal with if he should meet him in Washington.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have here another account of him. This is in the nature of an interview with him, and it comes from a newspaper, the reliability of which can not be questioned, I imagine, for it is taken from the Houston Post, of Texas, of the 24th of December, 1906. I read as follows:

RANGER CAPTAIN M'DONALD—HE IS PERFECTLY WILLING TO BE CROSS-EXAMINED BY FORAKER—STORY OF THE BROWNSVILLE RAID AND WHY MAJOR BLOCKSOM FORMED HIS OPINION—M'DONALD ACCUSED MAJOR PENROSE OF BEING AN ACCESSORY AFTER THE FACT TO THE BROWNSVILLE OUTRAGE—SOME THINGS THAT HAVE NOT HERETOFORE BEEN PUBLISHED.

Captain of Rangers William J. McDonald spent last night in Houston en route to Madisonville, where he has business that demands his attention. As usual, the captain is going "squirrel hunting." In other words, the captain's business is no one else's business. He doesn't talk much. He simply acts when the time comes.

"Foraker doesn't seem to know much about the Rangers of Texas, Captain," suggested the Post man last night at the Rice Hotel.

"What is that fellow jumping on me for, anyway? I haven't done anything to him. I could tell him who the Rangers are and what they are for, though. I could tell him that the Rangers are the fellows that bring the scalawags and rascals that he is trying to defend to justice. When the Rangers get hold of them, and they generally get hold of them when they start after them—they may stand hitched. We had those negroes down there at Brownsville, and we were making them stand hitched. They would have been hitched yet if the matter had not assumed a new phase, over which we had no control. Now, I don't care to break into the limelight, but if Foraker is anxious to put questions to me concerning the Brownsville affair, I will not dodge the issue."

When Major Blocksom suggested that Captain McDonald "would charge hell with one bucket of water," there is no doubt but he meant just what he said. Foraker, however, seized upon this and used it with derision in his address. Major Blocksom had every reason to believe that Captain McDonald was not afraid of a whole regiment of soldiers. The captain's actions in Fort Brown before the officers and the soldiers demonstrated that he was able to take care of himself, even though many loaded guns were aimed at him.

Now follows the account:

HOW M'DONALD FOUND BROWNSVILLE.

The captain was in Dallas filling the position of sergeant-at-arms for the Democratic convention when the outrage was committed at Brownsville. It was ten days after this that he arrived in Brownsville, and he went to work at once.

I think that should be two days.

The whole populace was in a state of uproar. The soldiers on the inside of the fort were on guard with their firearms loaded, and feared lest the people of the city made an assault upon the fort, while the people of the city, wrought up to the pitch of desperation and ready to fight, nevertheless were in a state of fear lest the soldiers inside the fort should make another onslaught upon the town.

When Captain McDonald, with his trusted sergeant, McCauley, arrived they went quietly to work gathering evidence. They did not go directly to the fort, but finding an ex-soldier who knew something of the assault made by the negroes, got from him all he knew.

He was one of the twelve men caused to be arrested by Captain McDonald, who was afterwards acquitted by the grand jury.

The captain and his sergeant then went to the fort. On the way the citizens met them and warned them that they would never get back alive if they entered the fort; that the negro soldiers would kill them.

HOW HE TALKED TO THE NEGROES.

As they entered about twenty negroes leveled their guns at them and demanded that they halt. They did not halt, but kept moving toward the negro soldiers and their aimed guns. The captain was doing some talking meanwhile. He talked to them like he would talk to a negro, and told them what kind of stunts he would have them doing if they didn't put up their guns, and they put up their guns.

"I'm Captain McDonald, of the Texas Rangers. I've come down here to investigate you black scoundrels. If you make a move with those guns I'll show you how to make kinky fur fly. Where is Major Penrose?"

Involuntarily the hands of most of the negroes went to their hats. There was a ring in the captain's voice that they did not mistake. That ring carried time backward in its flight more than forty years. It was not United States soldiers standing menacingly over a civilian. It was negroes—the old-time plantation negroes—in the presence of a southern gentleman.

"Yes, sir, cap'n; yes, sir. Majah Penrose he ovah dar in his house."

"One of you black scoundrels show me to him."

They all bent their bodies in a bow and all were ready. The captain selected the one for the service and the darkey led the way to where Major Penrose was in consultation with Major Blocksom and Captain Macklin.

WHEN BLOCKSOM FORMED HIS OPINION.

"I am Captain McDonald, of the Texas Rangers. The governor has sent me down here to investigate this outrage," is the manner in which Captain McDonald introduced himself to Major Penrose and the other officers. "What have you learned about this thing?"

"Absolutely nothing," answered Penrose.

"Nothing! Do you mean to tell me that you have investigated this matter and have learned nothing about it? How about Corporal Miller's connection with it?"

In connection with Corporal Miller, McDonald mentioned the names of other negroes. He had secured information from the ex-soldier and had gathered the names of many negroes who were mixed up in the affair, and he was able to talk in a manner which showed that he was familiar with the affair.

"Corporal Miller was not mixed up in this affair at all. He was at roll both at 8 o'clock and at 11 o'clock. I saw him, and Captain Macklin saw him."

"Have Corporal Miller brought in here, and let me question him, and I'll prove to you that you are mistaken."

Corporal Miller was brought in and the captain conducted the examination. Penrose and Blocksom would occasionally break in with a question, but the captain informed them that it was he that was conducting the examination; that they could ask him questions as to where he was last year or the year before, but they would have to postpone their questions until he got through with the negro; that he wanted to know where Miller was on the night of the shooting up of the town.

CORPORAL MILLER MADE ADMISSIONS.

They all got good, and Miller became very humble, and he admitted that he was not in the fort at either 8 o'clock or at 11 o'clock and that he did not return to the fort until about or after 12 o'clock on the night of the shooting up of the town. During this examination the negro had his cap off. Captain McDonald had his attention. It was to this civilian and not to his superior officers that he humbled himself. To the captain he was a negro; to Penrose, Blocksom, and Macklin his attitude was not even that of a soldier in the presence of his superiors. He had forgotten that he was a soldier. And he belched up things right along, and he got himself arrested for it, and the captain made the arrest.

Then they go on, Mr. President, with a half column more of it. I shall ask to have it all printed in the RECORD. I have read just enough to show the character of this man's knowledge of this affair and to show something of the character of the man himself. I did not intend, when I referred to him some days ago, to do him any injustice; but in view of the fact that he seems to think I have, and especially in view of the fact that my much esteemed colleague, the Senator from Texas, seems to think I have reflected upon him, I think it but due to Captain McDonald that these interviews with himself, which are apparently his own picture of himself, should be put in the RECORD, where all the Senate and all the country and all posterity may read them and know of this man, who is as fearless and brave as he is truthful and honest and who seems to have had much to do with the preparation of this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The matter referred to by the Senator from Ohio will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Captain McDonald arrested thirteen negroes on warrants issued from the State courts. Major Penrose told him that seven or eight of the negroes under arrest were the right ones, but that he was mistaken about the others.

ACCUSED PENROSE OF BEING AN ACCESSORY.

"If you know that much about this thing, how is it that you do not know all about it and who were connected with it? Why don't you assist me in bringing the guilty scoundrels to justice?"

And right there Captain McDonald threw it into the teeth of Major Penrose that he was an accessory to the crime.

Major Blocksom heard it and there isn't much wonder that he is of the opinion that Captain McDonald, of the Rangers of Texas, "would charge hell with one bucket of water."

But this is not all that Major Blocksom saw of the captain that firmly fixed this in his mind. During the time that the thirteen negro soldiers were locked up in the guardhouse the wires were kept hot. The order to move the troops came. Captain McDonald had the warrants in his pocket and the negroes were in the guardhouse inside the fort. He could not place them in the county jail. At least he deemed that the temper of the people made it advisable that the negroes be kept locked up inside the fort. The officers of Brownsville had allied themselves with Major Penrose and against McDonald. They demanded that he give over the warrants which he had in his possession. He still refused. The demand was made upon the order of the court, and officers went to him as officers and made the demand and fortified themselves, as officers do under such circumstances, back of their guns. It was no use. The captain had the warrants. He was ready for any test, and he stood them off. Meanwhile he had asked the governor for instructions. The message came back:

"Cooperate with the officers of Brownsville."

FORCED COMPANY OF TROOPS BACK TO FORT.

Meantime the troops were on the move. A company was taken to the depot. Captain McDonald and his trusted sergeant went down to the depot to see if any of the negroes for whom he had warrants were among those being taken away. They did not have any of his negroes, so he and his sergeant started toward the fort. They met a company of negroes coming up. They were on the way to the depot to be removed to San Antonio. Among them were some of the negroes that McDonald had arrested.

"Take them negroes back to that fort and lock them up; they are my prisoners. I'll show you people some things. I know just where I am at in this matter, and if you people attempt to take those negroes another step toward that depot we'll get busy."

The negroes were "righted about" and taken to the fort, and those that McDonald had warrants in his pocket for were locked up again. The governor's message had arrived by this time, but McDonald did not deliver up his warrants until the next morning, and then the negroes were placed on board a train and scooted out of Brownsville.

INFLUENCE ON THE NEGRO.

During their contact with McDonald they had become negroes again, all of them. They had become subdued, notwithstanding they had made the threat that one company of the Twenty-fifth was not afraid to charge the whole State of Texas, and as the captain passed among them at the fort their hands went to the caps and they bowed in respectful manner. The influence of the captain remained with them until they were many miles away from Brownsville. A gentleman who was on the train which took the negroes away from Brownsville states that they were meek and that not a word did any soldier speak until Brownsville was 20 or more miles behind them. They then showed signs of boastfulness again.

FORAKER might have misinterpreted the meaning of Major Blocksom, but when Blocksom gave expression to his now famous epigram, he felt that way about it.

Captain McDonald has written several reports of the Brownsville affair, giving the inside of the whole thing. He has written a report to Governor Lanham and a report to President Roosevelt, and upon instructions from Governor Lanham has written a report to Senator CULBERSON.

HAS GIVEN ROOSEVELT INFORMATION.

He has also written a letter to the President congratulating him upon his action in disbanding the negro soldiers. In this letter he told the President some things that the President did not know before.

Just what these things were is another story. At any rate President Roosevelt has ordered a court-martial of Major Penrose and Captain Macklin. Just where Captain Macklin was on the night of the murder is an unknown quantity. He averred that he saw Corporal Miller at roll both at 8 o'clock and at 11 o'clock. It transpires, however, that he will have a hard time proving that he himself was there.

THE CAPTAIN WHEN NOT IN ACTION.

This man, Captain McDonald, is a little bit of a fellow. One can almost span his waist with two hands. He is not to say abbreviated of stature, but he is by no means tall, and he is very frail. He is mild of manner and unassuming and as docile as a lamb, and his eye is kindly and twinkles with a smile. He is as plain as an old shoe, and no one to meet him on the street would take him to be a "bad man." But this is the Captain McDonald when not in action. Major Blocksom, it seems, can best tell what the man looks like when he is in action, and should FORAKER ever come in contact with him during such a time it would not be in a derisive way that he would say that he was one of those fellows who "would charge hell with a bucket of water."

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask for a vote on the resolution, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it was not my pleasure to hear all the remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] who has just taken his seat, but from what I can learn of his remarks I think the country is to be felicitated upon the fact that he has now turned his attention from attempting to establish the innocence of the guilty persons to a species of ridicule of the captain of the Texas Rangers. From what I caught, what the Senator has read seems to be merely an effusion of some newspaper reporter in Texas, I believe, and some representative of the Cincinnati Enquirer, as to the character of man Captain McDonald is—of course, purposely exaggerated.

There is one thing else I ought to add to what I have said about Captain McDonald, and that is this: In view of the wish expressed in this Chamber a few days ago—but which has been omitted from the RECORD—to meet him, it affords me very much pleasure to say, in the same spirit, that he never declined an invitation of that character in all his life, and he is too old to change his habits now.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer to the resolution the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "discharge" it is proposed to insert "by the President of the United States in the exercise of his constitutional and legal authority as Commander in Chief."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, which will be charged with the proposed investigation and with hearing the testimony, I think it would be very unbecoming in me to form any final opinion as to the question of fact which has been raised, and certainly most improper for me to express any opinion in regard to it. The question of fact is all that is covered by the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and I hope that resolution will pass at the earliest moment, and that the committee will take it up and press their hearings to a conclusion. But until they have heard all the testimony, as a member of the committee I think it would be, as I have said, unfitting for me to discuss the question of fact.

But the question of law is an entirely different one. That question was opened up by the Senator from Ohio the first day he spoke. It has been discussed again to-day by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. While it would be an impropriety for me to form or express an opinion as to the facts, I can see no possible objection to myself or any other Senator, whether a member of the committee or not, expressing an opinion as to the question of law. I have given some study to it during the recess, and I have no doubt whatever as to the President's constitutional and legal authority to issue the order which he did discharging the soldiers. Whether the facts justified that order is a wholly different question, and that is the question which the resolution refers to the committee for decision; but as the legal and constitutional question has been raised, I think it would be just as well for the Senate to pass upon that question and remove it entirely from the jurisdiction of the committee, confining them, as the resolution purports to confine them, to the question of fact.

It is for this reason that I have moved the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment. That is a question as to which the Senate should not estop itself from giving further consideration. It is a very important question. It is true I made some remarks upon that point when I spoke a few days ago, and it is true that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] discussed that proposition to-day; but the discussion of the Senator from Texas and the discussion I indulged in are enough in themselves to show that it is at least a controverted proposition.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says that he has no doubt about the President's authority. I have no doubt either as to the view I have expressed. It is a matter which, it seems to me, ought not to be acted upon in connection with the resolution providing for an investigation of the facts. Let us confine the resolution to its purpose, namely, to investigate the facts, and then, when we have all the facts, we can consider not only the law applicable to the state of facts we may report, but also all the law applicable to the case as it is insisted by others it has already been established. So I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask before action is taken that the original resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution of the Senator from Ohio as it is proposed to be amended by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary read the resolution as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to take such further testimony as may be necessary to establish the facts connected with the discharge, by the President of the United States in the exercise of his constitutional and legal authority as Commander in Chief, of members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon, by bill or otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio says very justly that his resolution deals only with the facts. It is for that purpose—to confine the committee entirely to the facts—that I have offered the amendment. I think the Senate will have to pass upon the question of constitutionality, as it has been raised, and it seems to me they can pass on it just as well at one time as another.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to take the Senator from Massachusetts from the floor, but now or at the conclusion of his remarks I wish to ask unanimous consent that the resolution of the Senator from Ohio and the amendment to it proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts lie over until to-morrow or until our next meeting, allowing it to keep its place until it comes up in regular order after morning business.

Mr. FORAKER. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very anxious to have this resolution disposed of as soon as possible. I should like to be heard briefly upon my amendment. I am suffering to-day from a cold and a somewhat sore throat, and it is extremely difficult for me to go on this afternoon——

Mr. FORAKER. In view of that statement, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. LODGE. But if the Senator from Ohio insists, I will go on.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts—I did not know that the request was made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] on account of the Senator from Massachusetts—I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LODGE. I did not ask the Senator from Wyoming to make the request; he made it entirely upon his own motion. I was about to make the request when the Senator from Wyoming took the floor. But it would be a great convenience to me if this matter could go over until Monday, because, as I say, it is only with difficulty that I can speak, owing to the extreme hoarseness from which I am suffering.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in the event the resolution goes over, what will be its parliamentary status?

Mr. HALE. Let it be understood, Mr. President, that the resolution comes up at the end of the routine morning business, as it did to-day, and is before the Senate. If that is the understanding, I shall move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator to indulge me just one remark before he makes that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we have just had a recess of nearly two weeks. There is considerable business that should be accomplished by the Senate before we adjourn on March 3. In a very short time we will have the appropriation bills before us, and they will have the right of way to the exclusion of nearly everything else.

Some days ago I gave notice that I would call up the pension bill to-day; but at the request of Senators who wished to debate to-day the Brownsville matter I gave way, giving notice at the time that I would call up the bill to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business. It seems to me almost wholly unnecessary to have us here for just one day for a couple of hours after a two weeks' recess and then immediately adjourn for three more days. We ought to have time at this session of Congress to consider something else besides the Brownsville affair and the appropriation bills. I should very much appreciate it if the Senate would adjourn only until to-morrow and take an hour or two in the forenoon to consider other bills than appropriation bills.

I should like to bring up the pension bill to which I have referred. I do not object to the Brownsville matter taking its place on Monday. There has been, I think, no notice given for Tuesday, but the time will be so short that, unless we can take up the pension bill during the early part of the session before the appropriation bills come before us, we can not take it up at all.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I would not interpose a motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next if I believed that any legislative business would be done in the meantime. Senators have been away, and a great many of them are not here now. If we have a session to-morrow nothing will be done about the subject-matter that has occupied the Senate to-day, and nothing will be done upon the measure which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has in hand and at heart, except perhaps some debate, and then the matter will go over. For one, I am entirely willing to come here to-morrow and spend an hour or two in listening to debate on the pension bill, but there will be no action upon it; there will be no action upon anything; it will simply occupy so much time. But I leave all that to the Senate.

First, I ask, Mr. President, that the resolution in regard to the Brownsville affair go over, retaining its place, to be considered when the Senate next meets, at the end of the routine morning business, in order that Senators who desire to be heard can be heard upon that, and in order, as no reference has yet been made, that the Senate may at an early day pass upon the main question, which is, Shall the resolution be referred to the committee?
